Governor offers partisan advice to county Democrats

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The county Democratic Party, eager to change its second-banana image and challenge local Republicans, got advice and encouragement Monday from the state's top Democratic cheerleader: Gov. Cecil Andrus.

Andrus told about 60 local Democrats that they should focus their efforts on capturing a few local offices – starting with the ones held by county commissioners Norma Blass and Marvin Hempleman.

"You have to start at the courthouse level. From the courthouse it grows," the four-term governor said. "You have an open seat coming up on the county commission. You ought to win that."

Actually, both Blass and Hempleman will be up for re-election in 1994.

Andrus also urged Democrats to take on a few unnamed GOP legislators whom he described as "very, very vulnerable."

"I want to see Twin Falls County be a bipartisan county, and I think you can do it," he said.

Andrus, whose personal popularity in predominantly Republican Twin Falls County belies his party affiliation, spoke at the first of a planned series of luncheons put on by the county Democrats.

He was joined by former state Sen. Mike Burkett of Boise, who is gearing up a campaign for the Democratic nomination to succeed Andrus.

Broader U.S. air operation appears likely

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. commitment to protect U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia suggests the use of Air Force and Navy ground-attack jets, taking American involvement a step beyond merely policing the skies, military officers said Monday.

Air Force F-15C fighters, equipped for air-to-air combat but not for bombing, already are helping enforce the United Nations-imposed "no-fly" zone over Bosnia. But the proposed U.S. role in the new allied plan would suggest the use of warplanes, such as the F-15E Strike Eagle, specializing in ground attack, officers said.

U.S. commanders in Europe also could call on A-10 Thunderbolt ground-attack planes, the AWACS command and control aircraft and a variety of electronic warfare planes that could jam radar signals from Serb anti-aircraft emplacements.

At the Pentagon, officials said details of the U.S. role are yet to be worked out.

"They've still got to decide what it is they agreed to," one officer said in reference to the action plan announced Saturday by Secretary of State Warren Christopher. The officer discussed U.S. involvement on condition he not be identified.

The U.N. Security Council must vote on the plan worked out by the United States, France, Britain, Russia and Spain. It would create safe areas, or havens, for Bosnia Muslims through the use of U.N. but not American peacekeepers.

The arrangement commits the United States to use its air power to protect the peacekeepers should they come under attack. What has not been spelled out is how U.S. warplanes would carry out that mission. President Clinton has ruled out the use of U.S. ground forces in Bosnia.

The State Department spokesman, Richard A. Boucher, said Monday "we are prepared to protect and rescue" endangered peacekeepers in the safe areas. And a senior U.S. official said launching air strikes against Serbian forces that attacked peacekeeping troops was "within the range of possibilities."

It is not clear how substantial an operation the U.S. forces would be prepared to carry out or under what circumstances they might act. One

Marshal denies telling officer he opened fire

The Associated Press

BOISE — A federal marshal Monday adamantly denied that he ever told an Idaho State Police captain that he fired the first shot last Aug. 21, igniting a deadly fire fight outside the remote Panhandle cabin of white separatist Randy Weaver.

Inspector Arthur Roderick at times yelled at defense attorney David Nevin, who was trying to discredit the federal agent's testimony with a report that ISP Capt. David Neal of Twin Falls said Roderick told him shortly after the shootout that he fired the first shot.

"I don't know how many times I have to answer this question," Roderick said angrily.

Roderick stuck to his earlier court statements that he heard a shot fired by others before he fired to kill the Weavers' dog.

"I heard a shot to my left, and figured we were obviously in a confrontation, and I decided it was time to take the dog out," he testified.

Throughout the murder-conspiracy trial, which wrapped up its 25th day, the government has maintained the first shot was fired at marshals, leaving them no choice but to defend themselves in a gunfight they had no intention of starting.

The trial was adjourned abruptly last Friday after defense attorneys claimed the government had held back the information about Neal's statement for as much as three weeks. But on Monday, the defense team said it would not pursue a formal accusation of government prosecutorial misconduct.

The gun battle claimed the life of Deputy Marshal William Degan and Weaver's 14-year-old son Samuel, triggering an 11-day siege of the mountaintop cabin that federal marshals had watched constantly since February 1991 when Weaver failed to appear for a trial on a weapons charge. Weaver's wife, Vicki, 42, was killed by a federal sniper on the second day of the siege.

Weaver, 45, and Kevin Harris, 25, are charged with Degan's murder. No one has been charged in the deaths of Samuel or Vicki Weaver.

During cross-examination, assistant U.S. Attorney Kim Lindquist repeatedly interrupted Nevin's questioning as the defense attorney pressed Roderick for an explanation of why Neal would say Roderick admitted firing first.

Lumber giant draws $11 million fine

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — One of the nation's largest lumber companies, Louisiana-Pacific Corp., was fined $11.1 million Monday for violating clean-air laws and ordered to install $70 million in anti-pollution equipment.

Clinton administration officials said the company based in Portland, Ore., exceeded federal emission levels, gave false information to the government and violated other regulations.

Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Carol Browner and Attorney General Janet Reno held a joint news conference to announce the settlement, the second largest civil fine ever levied under federal environmental laws.

Browner said the case, begun during the Bush administration, sends "a loud and clear message that the Clinton administration will vigorously enforce our environmental laws. We will use the full range of our enforcement powers to make polluters pay for the true cost of pollution."

The violations occurred in 11 states at 14 facilities operated by Louisiana-Pacific and its wholly owned subsidiary, Kirby Forest Industries, Inc.

EPA Director Carol Browner, left, and Attorney General Janet Reno outline the $11 million civil penalty against Louisiana Pacific Corp.

The company operates wood processing plants that contribute to air pollution by emitting volatile organic compounds, particulate matter, carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide and other pollutants.

The EPA said the company failed to get the required permits for those emissions in some cases and in others falsified data about emission levels.

"What happened here is we had a pattern of false information being given or incorrect information being given ... at a number of facilities across the country," said Browner.

Louisiana-Pacific must install $70 million in state-of-the-art anti-pollution equipment over the next two years. The plants will not be required to shut down in the meantime.

EPA said the new equipment will reduce by up to 95 percent the pollutants emitted during the manufacture of Louisiana-Pacific's wood paneling products. The equipment, using an incineration method of destroying the pollutants, was developed by EPA specialists with Louisiana-Pacific, said Browner.

Harry A. Merlo, president and chairman of Louisiana-Pacific, said in a statement, "Although we are certainly disappointed with the penalty, we decided that the benefits of this settlement in ... providing us with environmental leadership opportunities made it the right thing to do."

Fire threat declines

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With heavy winter snow and a rainy spring, the threat of forest fires has declined to the lowest level in years across much of the West, the Interior Department said Monday.

But department officials said more than a normal number of fires are expected in Oregon and Washington, where the longtime drought persists, as well as at lower elevations across the West where large amounts of grass will create a tinderbox when it dries.

"The extreme severe drought has receded significantly," said Jay Thiefen, a forest fire expert for the Bureau of Land Management. He said large timbers at higher elevations are wetter than normal and not as likely to unleash a rapidly spreading fire if ignited by lightning.

Weather summary

High pressure brought mostly sunny skies and warmer temperatures to Idaho today.

A low pressure area off the west coast is slowly moving towards the California coast and will bring increasing moisture to the state for afternoon and evening thunderstorms as the week progresses.

Most of the state was partly cloudy to clear Monday afternoon. No precipitation was noted around the state.

Temperatures around the state were warmer Monday afternoon and were mostly in the 60s through the 70s.

The warmest temperature in the state Tuesday was 87 degrees at Hagerman. Stanley reported the coldest at 23 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Tuesday, the highest temperature was 102 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz. Wisdom, Mont., reported the lowest temperature at 22 degrees.

Thunderstorms dump rain on central sections of nation

The Associated Press

Thunderstorms crossed much of the nation's midsection on Monday.

Showers dotted the Northeast, the California coast and Florida. Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation, with sunny skies west of the Rockies.

Thunderstorms developed ahead of a cold front crossing the central states. Showers were scattered from the western and central Gulf Coast to the lower Great Lakes.

Showers associated with a warm front dotted the northern Atlantic Coast. Rain also fell in parts of the Plains and along the Northern California coast.

A steady rain soaked most of northeast Minnesota and northwest Wisconsin by early Monday. Brimson, Minn., had 1.63 inch and 1.44 inch fell at Duluth, Minn., by dawn.

Gusty winds buffeted Nebraska, the Dakotas, the Great Lakes, parts of the Plains, and the Ohio and Mississippi valleys. Winds gusted to 43 mph at Sheldon, Iowa.

Clouds, rain and blustery northwest winds were helping keep temperatures in the 40s and 50s by afternoon from North Dakota through the Mississippi Valley to Michigan.

Readings were in the 80s across much of the southern Atlantic Coast region and in the 80s and 90s in the Southwest deserts.

Monday's low temperature for the Lower 48 was 29 degrees at Lewistown, Mont.

Senate gives nod to Achtenberg

Achtenberg

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Senate brushed aside complaints of conservatives Monday and confirmed an openly gay San Francisco supervisor, Roberta Achtenberg, to be a top federal housing official.

The vote was 58-31 to make Achtenberg, a former law school professor, assistant secretary for fair housing and equal opportunity in the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Both of Idaho's senators — Republicans Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne — joined 24 other Republicans and five Democrats in voting against the nomination. Forty-five Democrats and 13 Republicans supported the nominee.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., led the opposition, portraying her as a "militantly activist lesbian" who "tried to bully the Boy Scouts of America" into permitting homosexual scout leaders.

Other conservatives seized upon the Boy Scout issue, saying they were otherwise willing to vote for a qualified homosexual for high federal office.

Achtenberg supported cutting off United Way funding for the Boy Scouts because the organization would not allow homosexual scoutmasters and refused to strike a reference to God from their oath.

The San Francisco area United Way had taken the same position on grounds that the scouts violated an anti-discrimination policy, Achtenberg's supporters said.

Her chief Senate backer, Banking Committee Chairman Donald Riegle, D-Mich., called her "one of the most competent, credible and most articulate nominees we've presented to the Senate."

"The only real challenge ... boils down to her sexual orientation and that has no bearing on her qualifications," Riegle said. "All the other arguments are a smoke screen."

Both California senators, Democrats Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein, spoke in favor of the nomination.

Boxer, using language similar to Riegle, called the criticism by senators a "smoke screen ... for her private life."

Marshal

Roderick only said that it was the first thing he told Neat when the captain and his crisis unit appeared on Ruby Ridge following the initial fire fight.

Nevin and Gerry Spence also spent much of the afternoon pressing Roderick on the specifics of his account of the circumstances surrounding the shootout and pointing out to the jury even the smallest of inconsistencies between his current testimony and previous statements he has given.

The defense last week also claimed the government failed to turn over notes from an interview Deputy Marshal Larry Cooper had with an FBI agent just days after the shootout. Cooper was part of Roderick's reconnaissance team, and the notes apparently quoted him as saying the first shot he heard came from the kind of gun carried by marshals.

Cooper testified in the trial's opening days in mid-April that the first shot he heard came from the kind of gun Harris was carrying.

Because of that contradiction, the defense asked for the right to recall Cooper to impeach his testimony with the notes. Prosecutors objected, and U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge took the request under advisement.

The defense maintains the Weavers and Harris, who are associated with the Christian Identity Movement that blends Old Testament values with white separatism, just wanted to be left alone to practice their nonconventional religion and that bungling federal agents forced them to defend themselves.

the 1994 election cycle.

Andrus told the Democrats that they should go all-out to support a few good candidates, rather than dissipate energy and resources trying to fill every spot on the ballot.

"It may seem fair to say you'll split $100 between eight candidates, but that's not how it works," he said. "In local races, you have to pick out a strong candidate and put your resources there."

Burkett also passed on words of encouragement, along with a low-key bid for support in what is expected to be a tough primary battle.

"I see an active group of Democrats in Twin Falls County," he said. "This is an embodiment of the kind of spirit we'll need and the party-building we'll need to win the elections of 1994."

County Democratic Chairman Kris Pedersen said he was impressed by the turnout and optimistic it would help the party rebuild.

"This gives us the chance to get together, pick up ideas from each other, and build relationships that will help us next year," he said.

Pedersen, who has announced his resignation but is staying on to help look for a new chairman, said the search committee has met twice and identified some potential candidates.

But, he added, there's no rush to fill the position.

"We're taking our time about this to give you the kind of leadership you deserve," he told his fellow Democrats.

Earlier Monday, Andrus presented the city of Twin Falls with an award from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and a City Challenge Award, for reaching and sustaining 70 percent seat belt use.

Fire

The peak fire season begins about now and goes through August across most of the West, although Interior officials warned that serious fires often still erupt at other times of the year.

The last time that the news has been as good as this year going into a fire season was nearly a decade ago, said Thielen.

"It's a different situation ... this year," said Thielen, adding this year conditions for holding down the number of forest fires are the best since the early 1980s.

An exception may be in Washington and Oregon where the long drought has not yet receded and where snowpacks remain well below normal. Federal officials expect an above normal fire season in the two states.

"Although not as critical as 1992, this area probably holds the most severe fire potential for 1993," said the Interior's fire season outlook for this year.

The threat of fires also is expected to be above normal in the Northern Rockies, including parts of Idaho and Wyoming and all of Montana, as well as in Alaska.

Heavy snowpacks and strong spring rains have eased the fire threat in the remainder of the West.

candidate for the assignment would be the Air Force's AC-130 gunship, which is specially equipped for night operations, air reconnaissance and search and rescue.

The NATO operation, codenamed Deny Flight, that is enforcing the "no-fly" zone over Bosnia would not be adequate for protecting U.S. peacekeeping forces in the proposed safe areas. But the current operation could be expanded to include planes, such as the F-15E and A-10, that can bomb ground targets.

The U.S. planes participating in Deny Flight are flying from Aviano, Italy, a military base about 50 miles north of Venice in easy striking range of Bosnia.

Heading the U.S. operation in Bosnia would likely be Adm. Michael Boorda, who has the dual role of commander Allied Forces South and commander U.S. Naval Forces Europe, based at Naples, Italy.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin is scheduled to visit Aviano this week during a European trip. His office said he would be briefed on the Deny Flight operations, and he would be expected to hold talks with U.S. commanders in the area.

Shortly before leaving for Europe Monday, Aspin met at the Pentagon with Sadako Ogata, the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. His office issued a brief statement saying the two discussed "the ramifications of cease-fire" in Bosnia and "the need to reassess the refugee situation if a cease-fire holds."

The story should have stated that Howard and Mary Conrad filed an answer to the district's petition to have a judge validate a plan to issue bonds without voter approval.

The couple filed a motion asking a 5th District judge to dismiss the district's petition.

Health reform faces rising costs; millions uninsured

First in a series

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was near the end of a long day listening to heartfelt concerns about the nation's health care system, and Hillary Rodham Clinton's optimism was severely muted.

"I don't know that it is possible to satisfy every need that was heard today," said the first lady, designer-in-chief of the administration's plan for health reform.

"The best we can do is to be honest about facing the problems that everyone of us in this room have had a hand in helping to create."

Health care in America has been in a crisis for years, experts say, with costs soaring at horrifying rates and more and more people falling into the class of the un- or under-insured.

What's different now is that middle class America — people who've long taken employer-paid policies for granted and hardly think twice about going to the doctor — suddenly feel at risk.

"People are scared that their insurance is disintegrating," says Robert Blendon, a health policy expert at Harvard University.

One in two workers has seen his benefits cut in the past year, as companies struggling to control costs force their employees either to pay a bigger share of premiums or go into cheaper, "managed care" systems that restrict choices of doctors and hospitals.

Plus, it seems everyone knows someone without insurance. Some 100,000 people a month lose their insurance. In all, 37 million Americans will go without insurance for part of this year, and an additional 20 million have inadequate insurance, according to studies.

That day in Tampa, Fla., Mrs. Clinton heard from a man who had gone into debt to pay for care for a mother with Alzheimer's Disease. She also listened to a cancer doctor who cautioned that health maintenance organizations pressure him to treat patients in a "substandard way"; an advocate for the disabled who asked for coverage for home health care; the owner of a small business who talked of the burdens a new tax would cause; and a social worker who described how the elderly must choose between paying for food and buying prescription drugs.

And more.

Mrs. Clinton, chairing the president's task force, is fond of saying that people don't go without health care — they just get it when it's the most expensive. For instance, someone without coverage who gets in a car wreck won't get turned away at the emergency room. But big charges on other patients' bills — super-expensive Tylenol for example — make up for it.

The pool of 37 million uninsured is hardly a static group. One in four people will lose their insurance over a two-year period, either through changing jobs or going to part-time work. Insurance isn't transferrable if you change jobs.

Clinton, during last year's presidential campaign, often talked of a woman he'd met who gave up her job and applied for Medicaid, which provides federal assistance for the poor, to make sure a daughter with cerebral palsy could maintain health coverage.

The policy covering her daughter had paid out its limit of $1 million, and no other insurance company would offer coverage.

"I can't work unless something happens to Sarah," she said in a recent interview. "Now isn't that a lousy system."

The 20 million "under-insured" are often the self-employed, who must hunt for coverage on their own and pay several hundred dollars a month.

Because of the huge cost, many people accept a very high deductible, such as $5,000, which mainly protects them in case of catastrophic illness. The result: These people rarely go to the doctor, since every penny up to $5,000 comes out of their own pockets.

The through-the-roof cost of medical services is another part of the equation. Health care costs in America total more than $900 billion a year — one-seventh of the gross domestic product. They've risen at more than double the pace of inflation for years, eating into business profits, soaking up workers' wage increases and limiting the government's ability to rein in the federal debt.

Paperwork and waste add to the problem. Complicated insurance forms — there are hundreds of different carriers, all with different forms and requirements — have put a crushing burden on doctors and providers.

Some estimates show that 23 cents of every health care dollar goes for administrative costs.

"If you think of waste as being energy that doesn't result in health care, then yes, you could call it waste," said Dr. John Eisenberg, a Georgetown University physician who heads a commission that advises Congress on doctors' fees.

So Clinton's challenge is mega-fold: find a way to cover everyone, control costs, maintain quality and cut the red tape.

No final decisions have been made, but the White House plan is shaping up as one that tries to strike a balance between two philosophies — the steering hand of government regulation and the prodding touch of competitive market forces.

Employers would all have to provide coverage, and, over time, the government would pick up the poor and jobless.

Everyone would be guaranteed a core package of benefits. And because many Americans, particularly those with union jobs or white-collar workers, already enjoy a comfortable benefits package, the Clinton administration hopes to make the mandated core benefits package generous, so those people would see improvement.

The core is likely to include mental health, substance abuse, prescription drugs, annual checkups and preventive care such as cholesterol tests, immunizations and mammograms. Many of those services are not now covered in the average benefit package.

Plan to broaden coverage for most

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton is committed to a health benefit package that would offer Americans more coverage than most have now, an administration official said Monday.

The package will include coverage for immunizations, mammograms and regular checkups for healthy children that are not usually paid for by health insurance, said the official, who insisted on anonymity.

The administration still has not decided other important features of the plan. How much people would pay out of pocket in copayments and deductibles would vary depending on whether a person chose fee-for-service medicine or a health maintenance organization, the official said.

Meanwhile, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said organized labor remains adamantly opposed to taxing employee health benefits to help pay for health reform.

Clinton health advisers want a package of health benefits so generous that most Americans would not be hit by any benefits tax. The administration is still weighing whether to tax benefits above certain levels.

Clinton gave his commitment to a broad benefit package at a Thursday night session with his health and economic advisers, the source said. His economic advisers had urged him to offer a more modest, less costly package. "The scope of services is comprehensive and better than what (most) people have today," the source said.

Angry residents block the road as California Department of Fish and Game officials try to enter the Venice canal area Monday to execute ducks, many infected with a deadly virus.

Residents squawk, prompting judge to halt canal duck killings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A flock of diseased ducks targeted for execution were given an 11th-hour temporary reprieve Monday.

A judge ordered wildlife officials to seek a compromise for dealing with the infected fowl.

Angry residents of the seaside suburb of Venice had stalled the kill planned for dawn by forming a wall between the ducks and wildlife officials moving in for the kill.

"What we really want to do is make sure things aren't done so hastily," said actress Alley Mills, who played the mother on TV's "The Wonder Years." About 100 bird lovers chanting "Save our ducks" twice turned away state biologists at a canal bridge. The four pickup trucks loaded with cages then drove off without incident.

A few hours later, a judge issued a temporary restraining order pending a June 1 hearing. He wants the state Department of Fish and Game and the preservation group Duck Watch to work out a compromise.

Biologists planned to collect the 350 birds and give them lethal injections because some carry duck plague, caused by a herpes-like virus that kills ducks, geese and swans. About 50 canal birds have died of the disease so far.

Venice retains several of the oldtime canals that used to criss-cross the beach town. The ducks are fed and loved by canal-area dwellers and tourists.

Wildlife officials fear migrating birds visiting Venice canals could contract and spread the virus.

Each year, an estimated 2.8 million wild waterfowl travel the Pacific Flyway, an avian highway that stretches from the Arctic to the Antarctic.

Duck supporters want the birds to be quarantined and tested, and want only the ones that have the virus killed. But state authorities said that plan wouldn't work.

"There is no test that will actually predict if they have the virus or not," said Chanelle Davis, a state biologist.

Infant found safe following car theft

CORONA, Calif. (AP) — A 9-month-old baby kidnapped when a man stole a young couple's van was found after police received an anonymous tip, authorities said Monday.

Kaitlyn Cortez was found shortly before midnight Sunday, still safely strapped in her car seat inside her parents' 1986 Ford Aerostar, said police Chief John Cleghorn.

The van was left in a parking lot about two miles from where it was stolen, Cleghorn said.

Police were led to the van by a man who called 911 from a pay phone. No arrests were made.

VMI loses Supreme Court battle, may have to accept women

WASHINGTON (AP) — Virginia Military Institute might be forced to admit women or give up state funds after losing a Supreme Court appeal Monday that tried to justify its men-only policy.

The high court turned away the military college's argument that its ban on women promotes educational diversity.

A federal appellate court last year ordered officials for Virginia and the school either to admit women, halt state funding for VMI, set up a parallel program for women or find another way to comply with equal-protection requirements.

VMI, which has 1,300 cadets in Lexington, Va., and The Citadel in Charleston, S.C., are the nation's only all-male, state-supported schools. The Citadel's admission policy also is under legal attack.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1982 that state-supported schools may have a single-sex admissions policy only if it is "substantially related" to achieving an important governmental objective.

In other action Monday, the court:

• Barred the FBI from automatically withholding from public disclosure the names of its sources in criminal investigations. The FBI does not have a blanket exemption from the federal Freedom of Information Act, the justices ruled unanimously.

• Refused to order a halt to an appellate court's investigation of John Demjanjuk's 1986 extradition to Israel, where he's under a death sentence as Nazi death camp guard "Ivan the Terrible." The appeals court is considering whether federal prosecutors withheld evidence that might have blocked the extradition.

• Ruled 8-1 that employers must contribute money, not property, to meet their funding obligations for pension plans covering 40 million American workers.

• Agreed to decide whether the military may continue appointing court-martial judges with no fixed terms of office, a practice challenged on grounds that the judges' jobs may be threatened by unpopular rulings.

• Agreed to decide in a South Carolina case whether states that increase the time between prison inmates' parole hearings may apply the change to all inmates.

In the VMI case, the school said its program emphasizes physical rigor, mental stress, absence of privacy, minute regulation of behavior and indoctrination of values. That program is aimed at developing character and self-discipline, and it would inevitably change if women were admitted, the college's lawyers argued.

Justice Clarence Thomas did not participate in the VMI case. His son, Jamal, is a sophomore at VMI.

The federal government sued VMI in 1990, saying the college discriminated against women in violation of the Constitution's 14th Amendment guaranteeing equal protection of the law.

Followers await return of Koresh

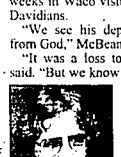

WACO, Texas (AP) — Followers of David Koresh aren't mourning his death.

They're awaiting his return.

About 40 disciples remain. Among them is Janet McBean, a California follower who spent the last two weeks in Waco visiting other Branch Davidians.

"We see his departure as a sign from God," McBean said.

"It was a loss to the world," she said. "But we know the world will be getting a second chance. He's doing the work right now."

Koresh

Followers believe Koresh, whose body was pulled from the charred ruins of the cult's compound, will return to form an earthly kingdom.

"This is just a waiting period, something God wants us to go through before he delivers," said McBean, a follower since 1988. "All of us will be rewarded in a special way."

Mary Jones, Koresh's mother-in-law, also remains a devotee, despite her personal tragedy: Her husband was killed in the shootout that started the 51-day siege, and two daughters, a son and four grandchildren died in the April 19 blaze.

"I just find great relief in the prophecies of the coming kingdom. It'll bring peace and good will toward all," said Mrs. Jones, who lives in Waco but didn't live in the compound.

The continued devotion isn't surprising to University of California, San Francisco psychology professor Chris Hatcher, who has followed the Branch Davidians for nearly two years.

"You will basically see a core of people who will continue to maintain their affiliation and belief system over time," said Hatcher, who has studied cults for 12 years.

Koresh and up to 85 followers died the day fire broke out. The standoff began Feb. 28 when agents raided the compound, seeking to arrest Koresh and search for illegal weapons. A gunfight broke out, killing four agents and six cult members.

Remaining followers are mostly in Texas, including eight in the McLennan County Jail and five in halfway houses. Some are in California and others are in England.

One is Stan Sylvia, who lost his wife and two daughters in the fire. He said he "understands the prophecy," but is still having trouble dealing with the family loss.

"When I saw the fire and I knew my wife and children were burning to death, I went numb. I couldn't cry," he said. "Now, that's all I do."

Ex-official says U.S. tried to oust Gadhafi

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States sent Libyan rebels to train in Iraq in the 1980s so they could overthrow Moammar Gadhafi, former government officials said Monday.

The operation was part of a developing intelligence relationship between Iraq and the United States that was to include over time the passing of U.S. satellite information to help Baghdad in its eight-year war with Iran, the officials said.

The full extent of the cooperation has not been revealed. But the Bush administration, defending itself against a storm of congressional criticism following the 1990 Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, left the impression it was limited to U.S. help for Iraq against Iran.

The decision to send several hundred Libyans for training in Iraq served several purposes, said Howard Teicher, formerly on the National Security Counail of the Reagan White House.

Iraq wanted to get even with President Gadhafi for supporting Iran in the war, he said, and Egypt wanted to encourage U.S. support for Iraq to block Iran from winning and spreading Muslim fundamentalism through the region. Also, said Teicher in an interview, the United States wanted to topple Gadhafi, accusing him of terrorism and attempts to destabilize his neighbors.

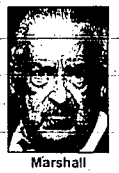

The Libyan exiles attempted a coup against Gadhafi in May 1984, but it was immediately crushed, Teicher recounted in his book, "Twin Pillars to Desert Storm," a chronicle of U.S. policy in the Mideast from Presidents Nixon to Bush.

Another former official, who asked not to be named, said the plot involved a raid by seaborne commandos who fired rockets and machine guns toward a military barracks used by Gadhafi.

The operation was crushed, and the estimated 15 rebels were killed in the raid or captured and later executed. The exiles were mostly students and dissidents living in Britain, Italy and other European countries, said Teicher.

The United States also trained other Libyans, captured in Chad when Libya invaded that country in the mid-1980s, to mount cross-border sabotage raids but failed to inflict much damage in Libya.

Papers chronicle Marshall's time on bench

Marshall

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the day that Wilbert Lee Evans died in Virginia's electric chair, Justice Thurgood Marshall offered — as he often did — the Supreme Court's only dissent to allowing the execution to go forward.

And in turn, as his last act, Evans asked that Marshall's eloquent words be buried with him. And they were.

The dissent, written on Oct. 17, 1990, is only one of the 173,000 documents that Marshall willed to the Library of Congress. In them, the reader can find a seamless chronicle of the ideals that the United States' first black justice espoused and lived by. The case of Wilbert Lee Evans illustrates that.

Marshall died last Jan. 24.

Evans was a murderer. But while he was on death row at the Mecklenburg, Va., Correctional Center, six other inmates took 12 prison guards and two female nurses hostage. Evans risked his own life by interceding, saving the prison employees' lives and preventing the rape of a nurse.

Gov. L. Douglas Wilder would not stop the execution. And, one by one, Marshall's colleagues on the Supreme Court wrote one-sentence notes, all alike: "I vote to deny the application for a stay and the petition for certiorari."

But not Marshall, who deemed executions cruel and unusual punishment.

"It is the system, not the life of the man sentenced to death, that should be dispatched," he wrote, calling his colleagues' refusal to stop the execution an "indifferent shrug of the shoulders."

The files contain letters from Evans' lawyers.

"I must tell you that the last thing I did for Evans in the minutes before his death was to help him write the words 'Please bury this with me' on his copy of your dissent," wrote Jonathan Shapiro of Alexandria, Va. "Evans took comfort in your stirring words."

Other documents on file in the library show other sides of Marshall's personality.

The court's public information office asked him in June 1986 how to respond to a public description of Marshall as "ailing."

"Tell them I am not hanging on for life," he scrawled on the request.

The Supreme Court is among the most solemn places in the capital. But among themselves, the justices often are jovial, even while debating serious issues.

Marshall was among the dissenters in a 1991 case when the high court by a vote of 5-4 upheld Indiana's public indecency law to prevent totally nude dancing.

Chief Justice William Rehnquist wrote a note to the others hoping to cut through the confusion.

"The theme of this fourth draft is a very positive one, and it can be summed up by a verse from a once-popular song," Rehnquist wrote. "Accentuate the positive, eliminate the negative, latch on to the affirmative, don't mess with Mr. In-Between."

Governor honored for gun-control support

BOSTON (AP) — New Jersey Gov. Jim Florio received the annual John F. Kennedy Profile in Courage Award on Monday for his steadfast support for gun control despite intense pressure.

New Jersey in 1990 enacted the nation's strictest ban on assault weapons. Florio, a Democrat, beat repeated attempts in the Legislature to repeal the measure.

The Profile in Courage Award takes its name from the 1957 Pulitzer Prize-winning book by then-Sen. John F. Kennedy. It honors people for political courage.

Recapturing Attu proved costly battle

Knight-Ridder News Service

The original timetable for retaking Attu, as drawn up six weeks earlier in San Diego, was three days.

Gen. Albert Brown, the 7th Division commander, had always argued that this was unrealistic given the mountainous terrain and bad weather that afforded the Japanese every defensive advantage.

On May 17, six days after the landing, Brown was relieved of command for having been proven right. There already had been 1,100 American casualties, about half due to exposure. Some 12,000 U.S. troops were making only slow progress against the 2,000 remaining Japanese.

The three battleships cruising off the coast had fired all their bombardment ammunition, but the Army had brought ashore enough artillery to give them fire superiority. Landing in two spots proved a sound strategy as the advance from Holtz Bay in the north finally forced the enemy to withdraw from the south, where they had pinned down the American troops at Massacre Bay. The two U.S. columns linked up on May 18.

The Americans made progress, but it was slow and costly. The Japanese were falling back to Chichagof Harbor east of Holtz Bay. The key to this position was Fish Hook Ridge along the southeast edge of Holtz Bay. Fierce fighting took place May 21 to 27 as the 4th Infantry Regiment cleared the ridge.

At Point Abe on May 21, a company of Japanese fought literally to the last man. The same occurred at Sarana Nose the next day. The Japanese had been ordered to hold Chichagof Harbor at all costs. Submarines were promised to evacuate the survivors. Meanwhile, Japanese submarines and air attacks sent from Paramushiro 350 miles away harassed the Americans, but did no significant damage. Weather hampered air operations on both sides.

Following the fall of Fish Hook Ridge, a mass assault was planned for May 29 to take Chi-chagof Harbor.

Gen. Eugene Landrum, who had replaced Brown, first gave the Japanese a chance to surrender. Instead, Col. Yasuyo Yamasaki decided to attack. Yamasaki had 800 men left. He had been informed by radio that the evacuation had been called off. It would be death or glory now.

The Japanese plan was bold. They would drive through the weakest point in the surrounding American lines, overrun and capture the U.S. heavy artillery at Engineer Hill and then move on to seize the U.S. supply dumps at Massacre Bay.

In the dark early hours of May 29, Yamasaki's small force infiltrated the American lines. They scattered a company of U.S. soldiers with a bayonet charge. They overran a command post where Capt. William Willoughby, the heroic commander of the Scout Battalion, was seriously wounded. The lead Japanese platoon destroyed a medical station, killing patients in their beds.

On Engineer Hill, artillery commander Gen. Archibald Arnold rallied gunners, cooks and staff officers. A banzai charge was thrown back by the 50th Engineers in hand-to-hand fighting. More charges followed, Yamasaki being killed while leading the final one.

Having failed, the last 500 Japanese soldiers committed mass suicide with grenades. Only 28 Japanese prisoners were taken on the entire island.

Saddam squeezes Kurds

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The rebellious Kurds of northern Iraq are being increasingly squeezed by Saddam Hussein through an economic blockade of their Western-protected enclave, military harassment and Western disinterest.

Saddam has made no bones about his desire to strangle the incipient Kurdish state that is emerging in a "safe haven" set up by the Gulf War allies in 1991.

And in this he has found himself with some strange allies — Turkey and Syria, key countries in the U.S.-led coalition that drove the Iraqis from Kuwait, and his old enemy Iran.

All these countries fear an independent Kurdish state in Iraq would galvanize their own Kurdish minorities.

The Kurds, who have battled Baghdad for decades for autonomy, are used to being friendless or the pawns of regional powers in the Middle East's ever-changing alliances.

But these days, just as they felt they were getting somewhere in their quest for self-rule, they fear they are again heading for another disappointment.

Kurdish leader Jalal Talabani told The Associated Press in a recent interview in Damascus, Syria: "The Western powers have made a lot of promises to help us. But none of them has been kept."

"We've met Western leaders and told them what we need. But we've got nothing," said Talabani, leader of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, one of the two main Iraqi Kurdish movements.

Almost every day, Saddam's troops deployed along the southern edge of the Kurdish enclave shell villages and farms. Saddam has several of his 24 army divisions along the 300-mile border.

They have tanks and artillery, although an allied ban on Iraqi air force flights has so far spared the Kurds from air attack as well.

Acquittal perplexes Japanese

TOKYO (AP) — Already perplexed by the fatal shooting of a Japanese exchange student who went to the wrong door in America, many people in this low-crime nation were incensed by the acquittal of the man who did it.

One newspaper questioned Monday whether the U.S. jury system could satisfy the grievances of an injured party from another culture, particularly one in which violence is infrequent.

The news that Rodney Peairs was cleared of manslaughter charges in the shooting of 16-year-old Yoshihiro Hattori last Halloween was the top story in Japanese news media and a hot topic in conversations.

Sunday's verdict was "totally unfair," Akira Muraoka, a Tokyo office worker, said in a street interview. "Americans seem to think they can solve anything with a gun. Why don't they just stop using them? And who says you need to use a gun in order to be free?"

Ordinary citizens are banned from owning handguns in Japan, and the shooting of Hattori in Baton Rouge, La., has brought sharp questioning of the ready availability of guns in the United States.

"I don't think Peairs committed a sin, but he certainly could have used better judgment," said Yasuko Sakurai, co-owner of a convenience store in Tokyo.

"A reasonably intelligent person doesn't just shoot someone who knocks on the wrong door," she said. "If he's not guilty, does that mean it's OK to shoot people just like that?"

Peairs shot Hattori, who was looking for a Halloween party, with a .44-caliber Magnum revolver when the teen-ager apparently misunderstood his command to "Freeze!"

Japanese reaction has focused on the issues of violence and widespread gun ownership in the United States, with no suggestions of racism or anti-Japanese bias in the case. There was no indication Peairs knew he was shooting a Japanese in a darkened carport.

Magic to reduce payroll before signing 1st pick

ORLANDO, Fla. — Now that the Orlando Magic have won the lottery, they'll look for ways to trim their payroll.

The Magic will need a reduction of about $4 million to sign the No. 1 pick in next month's draft and still fit under the NBA's salary cap.

The cap required the Magic to do some juggling last year before they could sign No. 1 pick Shaquille O'Neal to a seven-year, $40 million deal. Now Orlando has the top choice again after beating 1-in-66 odds to win Sunday's NBA lottery.

Before signing the No. 1 pick, probably former BYU center Shawn Bradley or Michigan forward Chris Webber, the Magic may have to trade or release several players. Candidates include forwards Brian Williams and Terry Catledge, who are to be paid a combined $3 million next season.

Report: European basketball star Kuvoc meets with Bulls

CHICAGO — Last week, the Chicago Bulls supposedly weren't planning to meet with European basketball star Toni Kukoc any time soon. This week, things are different.

Kukoc was at the airport in Minneapolis on Sunday with Al Vermeil, the Bulls' strength and conditioning consultant.

Bulls vice president Jerry Krause said before Sunday's 98-90 loss to the New York Knicks that Kukoc has come to the United States only for a physical by team physicians.

Kukoc, the Bulls' 1990 second-round draft pick, rebuffed the NBA to sign a six-year deal with Benetton Treviso for a reported $15.3 million. He has a clause in his contract that allows him to join the NBA next season.

Italian newspapers reported last week that Kukoc was on his way to the United States to meet with Krause and negotiate with the Bulls.

Showboat casino to simulcast horse racing starting Friday

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Simulcast horse racing had its American birth at the Atlantic City Race Course a decade ago, but the track will share the format — and the profits — when Showboat casino opens Jake's Betting Parlor on Friday.

Resorts, Sands, Taj Mahal and Caesars casinos have plans for simulcasting, in which bets are taken on races seen via television from tracks in other cities.

The track, which says it supports casino simulcasting, will suspend its year-round operation Friday through June 2 "to give the Showboat a few days to get up and to give them a good patron base," said Valarie McGonigal, the track's publicity director.

CSI splits twin bill

By Patti Arnold
Special to the Times-News

FRUITA, Colo. — There's a word for what they played here Monday afternoon. Baseball isn't it.

Home run derby, maybe.

There were 20 home runs hit in the Northwest District baseball tournament, 11 by the College of Southern Idaho and nine by Trinidad State.

Not surprisingly, the teams split, with Trinidad coming back from a 7-0 deficit in the first game for a 13-9 win, and Southern Idaho crushing the Trojans 29-7 in the second game.

"I was bored," CSI Coach Jim Walker said after the second game, which was scheduled for nine innings, but went just eight. The coaches agreed to end it early before it really got out of hand.

"It's unrealistic, it really is," Walker said. "It gives the kids an unrealistic attitude and pretty soon they're all trying to tee off."

After CSI's Darren Schorr, the No. 8 hitter in the lineup, hit a two-run shot in the fifth inning of the second game, one of the Eagles was ready.

"I want one!" came the cry from the dugout. Chances are, he got one.

"I don't know how many there were today," Walker said. "Twenty? Twenty's got to be some kind of record for a double-header."

Trinidad State Coach Nino Giarratano figured five home runs in a game would be enough to win it.

At least it would be enough to be in the game, right? Wrong.

Not even hitting back-to-back-to-back home runs, as the Trojans did in the third inning was enough. And in the fourth, they added another one. The three-homer third pulled Trinidad within three, 7-3 and for a little bit, it looked as if the Trojans would be able to match their first-game comeback.

CSI scored five runs in the second and two more in the third, but Dax Holmstead doubled to lead off the Trinidad third inning and Manuel Montano singled

Reds' Perez out; Johnson steps in

The Associated Press

Perez

Johnson

CINCINNATI – Tony Perez expected to get fired some day, but not like this.

The Cincinnati Reds manager was asleep, with no inkling of trouble ahead, when general manager Jim Bowden called Monday morning and fired him over the phone.

After just 44 games, Bowden had decided to replace the popular Perez with former New York Mets manager Davey Johnson, who hasn't managed or coached in the majors in three years. Johnson, one of seven candidates who interviewed for the managing job last October, had been kept on the payroll as a consultant.

The fifth-quickest firing of a rookie manager in major-league history stunned Perez, who fought back tears while talking to reporters at his apartment building.

"I don't think it's fair," Perez said. "Was I cheated? I don't know. But I don't think it's fair. I think I did a good job."

The Reds had returned a few hours earlier from a 1-6 West Coast trip that left them 20-24, dropped them 9½ games behind San Francisco, and sealed Perez's fate.

Bowden, who's running the team while controlling partner Marge Schott serves a one-year suspension, decided a major change was needed to make the biggest payroll in the National League — $42.8 million — start living up to its big expectations. Perez is one of Schott's favorites, but her suspension for using racial slurs bars her from involvement in the club's operations.

Why change managers so quickly? Bowden didn't have a direct explanation.

"It's something we've been studying for a period of time, trying to diagnose why the team is playing so poorly," he told a hastily called news conference. "We have a lot of talented people on this team, a lot of proven veterans who are not getting the job done."

Although Perez came to the job with no managing experience, he didn't make any major blunders. Bowden chose the team and was responsible for the two main moves that have backfired — trading for the often-injured Kevin Mitchell and signing free-agent pitcher John Smiley, who's 1-6. Mitchell has produced, batting .364, but has missed 12 games with an assortment of injuries.

The firing leaves the Reds in chaos heading into an important three-game homestand against the defending champion Atlanta Braves. Bowden also fired pitching coach Larry Rothschild and third base coach Dave Bristol, and first base coach Ron Oester — a friend of Perez — resigned.

Former Reds player Ray Knight and Bobby Valentine, former manager of the Texas Rangers, were named as coaching replacements, and Jose Cardenal was promoted from outfield coach to first base coach.

Perez knew he was walking the plank from the day he was named manager. The Reds gave him only a one-year contract, and said they'd evaluate him after the season.

Suns overtake 'Sonics

The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Oliver Miller, hitting his shots and asserting himself underneath in the fourth quarter, led the Phoenix Suns to a 105-91 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics on Monday night in the opening game of the Western Conference final.

The 6-foot-9 rookie center scored 11 of his 15 points and had seven of his 10 rebounds in the last period, doing most of the damage in the first 3½ minutes while Charles Barkley rested. Miller also blocked five shots.

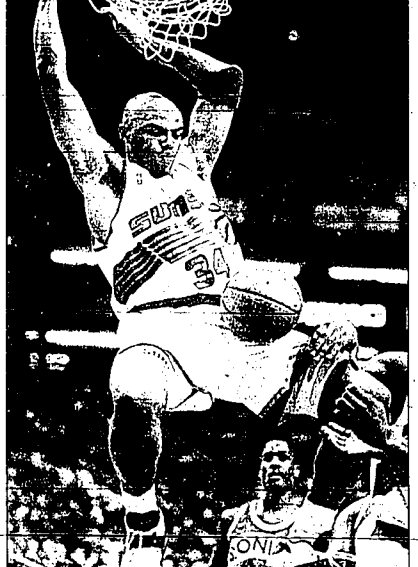

The Suns sent Seattle to its fourth straight loss on the road in the playoffs. Game 2 of the best-of-7 series is Wednesday night at Phoenix.

Phoenix outrebounded the Sonics 44-40 and executed its own version of pressure defense. The Suns blocked 16 shots, a team playoff record.

The Sonics did not score a field goal in the fourth quarter until Nate McMillan hit a 20-footer with 7:45 left, after the Suns had extended a 76-65 third-quarter score to 88-70.

Cedric Ceballos led Phoenix with 21 points despite playing only 23 minutes after suffering a strained left foot midway through the third quarter. Kevin Johnson had 16 points for the Suns. Barkley scored only 12 points but had 14 rebounds. Derrick McKey scored 17 points and Shawn Kemp had 16 for the Sonics.

Ceballos led a third-quarter spree that took the Sonics out of the game. Phoenix led 51-47 at halftime, but Ceballos made two quick field goals. Then, after two baskets by Ricky Pierce and one by McKey cut the margin to 60-59, Ceballos began a 10-0 run with a layup and ended it with another with 3:34 left in the quarter.

Wilkens calls it quits as Cleveland coach

The Associated Press

Wilkens

RICHFIELD, Ohio – If he's ever going to beat Michael Jordan, Lenny Wilkens will have to do it with a new team.

Wilkens, the second-winningest coach in NBA history, quit the Cleveland Cavaliers on Monday, exactly one week after yet another playoff failure against Jordan and the Chicago Bulls.

The Cavaliers made the playoffs five times during Wilkens' seven years as coach. Four of those times, they were ousted by the Bulls.

"It's been a great seven years here with the Cavaliers," the 55-year-old Wilkens said in a prepared statement. "However, I think it's time to move on."

Wilkens had one year remaining on a contract that reportedly would have paid him $750,000 next season. During the past week, he has been mentioned as a potential candidate for coaching vacancies with the Atlanta Hawks, Indiana Pacers and Los Angeles Clippers.

He previously declined to comment on those rumors, and the Cavaliers said he would not comment beyond his formal statement Monday.

"He said he thought a lot about it and had decided it was time to move on," said Gordon Gund, co-owner and chairman of the board of the Cavaliers. "He felt that maybe there was something to the fact that he had been heard too much by the players, that it was possibly time for a new voice and a new coach.

"We respect his decision and his desire to be released from his contract. We are complying with his request and wish him all the best in the future."

Together with general manager Wayne Embry, Wilkens helped restore respect to a Cleveland franchise that had become a laughingstock during several years of mismanagement under former owner Ted Stepien in the early 1980s. The 1986 draft, which brought Brad Daugherty, Mark Price and Ron Harper to the Cavs, provided the foundation for the rebuilding effort.

This season, the Cavs exceeded 50 victories for the third time in Wilkens' seven years. The 54 wins brought his career victory total with Cleveland, Seattle and Portland to 869, second in NBA history only to Red Auerbach's 938 with the Boston Celtics.

A former All-Star guard for St. Louis, Seattle and Cleveland, Wilkens coached Seattle to the NBA championship in 1979. He also was an assistant with the U.S. Olympic basketball team last summer.

Under Wilkens, the Cavaliers this season became the first team to lead the NBA in all three shooting categories: field-goal percentage, free-throw percentage and 3-point percentage. They also led the league in assists.

Courier, Becker, Edberg win 1st-round matches

The Associated Press

PARIS – Jim Courier picked up where he left off the past two years. Boris Becker and Stefan Edberg renewed their quests to get where they've never been before.

All three won first-round matches Monday at the French Open, with Courier and Becker enjoying straight-set victories while Edberg survived a tough, four-set struggle.

On a relatively uneventful day at Roland Garros, no seeded players — men or women — were eliminated.

Courier, the two-time defending champion and No. 2 seed, outslugged Argentina's Roberto Azar 6-3, 6-3, 6-3 to reinforce his status as the overwhelming favorite.

The fourth-seeded Becker, who has won every Grand Slam tournament except the French, overwhelmed wildcard entry Nicolas Escude 6-0, 6-3, 6-0.

No. 3 Edberg, missing only a French Open title to go with his collection of six Grand Slam victories, needed three hours to overcome clay-court specialist Marcelo Filippini 6-3, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

In the women's field weakened by Monica Seles' absence, No. 1 Steffi Graf got off to a shaky start before beating Cecilia Dahlman of Sweden 7-6 (7-4), 6-1. Second-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario also wavered before finishing off Monique Kiene of the Netherlands 6-3, 7-6 (7-1).

Security was tightened in the wake of Seles' stabbing during a tournament in Hamburg on May 30. Spectators were screened at entry gates and bodyguards — conspicuous in their dark suits — stood behind the players' chairs on center court during changeovers.

Courier, for one, was unfazed.

"Everybody out here is a bit more wary, but you have to proceed and do your job," he said. "You can't crawl into a shell."

Courier, who lost his No. 1 ranking to Pete Sampras but is still considered the top player on clay, started off in the same fashion in which he rolled through the field last year: dictating the pace from the backcourt with his blistering forehand and two-handed baseball-stroke backhand.

Azar, a left-hander ranked No. 93, stayed even with Courier through the first half of each set but the American always pulled away. Courier never lost serve.

In the first set, Courier saved three break points to hold for 4-3, broke for 5-3 and then served out the set in 47 minutes. In the second set, he broke for 4-3 with a crushing forehand cross-court passing shot. Two games later, Azar double-faulted twice in a row to hand Courier the set.

The pattern was similar in the third set, with Courier breaking for a 5-3 lead and serving out the match in the next game.

"It's a good way to get into the tournament," Courier said. "I had to fight. The guy didn't miss many balls. I did what I ad to do when I had to do it."

Becker had a much easier time, losing only three games and needing just 1:25 to dispatch his 17-year-old opponent.

CSI sophomore claims billiards title

IRVINE, Calif. – Carla Swails, a sophomore at College of Southern Idaho, won the 1993 Association of College Unions-International women's billiards championship held at University of California-Irvine.

Swails won 22 of her 37 matches to claim the title.

Malicki wins bodybuilding competition

BOISE – Kirk Malicki of Twin Falls took first place in the over-40 division at the Idaho State Bodybuilding Championships at Capital High School Saturday.

Malicki also finished second in the light-heavyweight open class.

Denny Hansen and Dave Ivy, both of Twin Falls, earned top-5 placings in the heavyweight novice division.

Judging looked for the biggest and leanest competitors in each division. The morning prejuding included seven mandatory poses and a routine from each bodybuilder done without music. The evening show included the routines done to music.

Blue Lakes builds Inter-City lead

TWIN FALLS – Blue Lakes Country Club used the third match of the Magic Valley Inter-City Ladies Golf Association season to stretch its lead to 10 1/2 points Thursday, May 13 at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course.

Blue Lakes now totals 44 1/2 to 34 for second-place Muny. Canyon Springs stands third a 33, Jerome fourth with 30 1/2, Rupert fifth at 23 1/2, Clear Lake sixth at 19, Burley seventh at 18 and Gooding eighth with 13 1/2.

Dianne Guiles of Burley was medalist with 76, three strokes better than Oleta Roberts of Clear Lake.

Blue Lakes' Reta Detweiler claimed net honors at 64. Jean Sutherland of Clear Lakes and Glenda McGreer of Canyon Springs tied for second with 65.

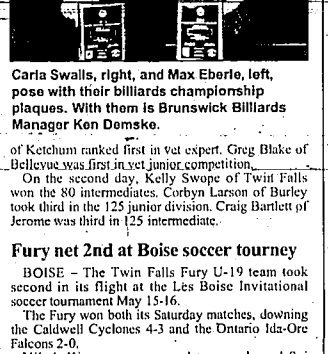

The next Inter-City match will be at Burley Golf Course June 23-24.

Reynolds nets 1st, 2nd in motorcross

PRESTON – Rich Reynolds of Twin Falls picked up a first and a second in the Eastern Idaho Motorcycle Association competition at Twin Lakes Motorcross Park May 15-16.

Reynolds competed in the 250cc expert division.

On the first day of racing, Clayton Bond of Jerome and Josh Blake of Bellevue took first and third respectively in the 80 junior class. Terry Wall of Jerome was second at 125 junior. Blake Barrymore of Ketchum ranked first in vet expert. Greg Blake of Bellevue was first in vet junior competition.

Carla Swails, right, and Max Eberle, left, pose with their billiards championship plaques. With them is Brunswick Billiards Manager Ken Domske.

On the second day, Kelly Swope of Twin Falls won the 80 intermediates. Corbyn Larson of Burley took third in the 125 junior division. Craig Bartlett of Jerome was third in 125 intermediate.

Fury net 2nd at Boise soccer tourney

BOISE – The Twin Falls Fury U-19 team took second in its flight at the Les Boise Invitational soccer tournament May 15-16.

The Fury won both its Saturday matches, downing the Caldwell Cyclones 4-3 and the Ontario Ida-Ore Falcons 2-0.

Vilath Kinnavongsa scored two goals and Sai Voravong and Justin Aiken one each against Caldwell. Matt Ramsey and John Parker had one assist each.

Against Ontario, Kinnavongsa tallied the Fury's second goal. Twin Falls' first score came when a Falcon player headed the ball into his own net. Goal keeper Donnie McCall recorded the shutout.

The Boise Capital Select tripped the Fury 2-1 Sunday. A Ramsey header of a Parker corner kick accounted for the Twin Falls goal.

Seven teams from Twin Falls will compete in the Idaho State Cup tournament in Boise May 29-31.

Muny teams take Pro-Ladies event

TWIN FALLS – Twin Falls Muny teams took the first two places in the Pro-Ladies tournament at Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course.

Using the Chicago System for scoring, Professional Mike Hamblin and Virginia Undhjem, Karen Darrington and Mary Ferrell totalled plus-16.

Second went to Hamblin, Carole Kasel, Charlotte Brunelli and Mary Ann Lancaster at plus-7.

Shadow Valley Golf Course's team of Doug Dekerchoug, Jean Smith, Ann Bulnes and Sherrie Oldenburg was third with plus-5.

Hamblin shot 4-under par 64 to win the pro sweeps medal play. Tied for second at even par were Ron Ptacek and Dennis Howell, Jr.

Oldenburg was plus-12 to win the amateur sweeps 0-20 handicap. Penny Bowles and Darrington tied for second at plus-5.

In the 21-over handicap division, Dora Jones and Jane Nourse tied for first at plus-4, one point ahead of Kasel.

Mets see Greene after loss to Phils

PHILADELPHIA — Tommy Greene — getting a key three-run homer from Dave Hollins to spoil New York manager Dallas Green's return to Philadelphia — remained undefeated as the Phillies beat the Mets 6-3 Monday night.

AP photo

New York Mets' Bobby Bonilla slides over the plate as Philadelphia Phillies catcher Darren Daulton loses the ball in the fourth inning of Monday night's game in Philadelphia.

National League

Hollins' seventh homer, off Frank Tanana in the fifth inning, overcame a 2-1 deficit. Pete Incaviglia had solo homers in the second and sixth innings. He now has eight homers, including five in his last five starts.

Greene (6-0), the National League leader with an earned run average of 2.12, held the Mets hitless until the fourth when they broke through for two runs on three hits. Green allowed five hits, struck out seven and walked three in his third straight complete game.

Green, who managed the Phillies to their only World Series championship in 1980, took over the Mets after Jeff Torborg was fired after Wednesday night's game. The loss left the Mets 1-3 under Green and 14-28 for the season.

Tanana (2-3) allowed eight hits, struck out two and walked two in six innings.

Cardinals 4, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Luis Alicea hit a two-run triple off reliever Mel Rojas in the 11th inning, and St. Louis won for the fourth time in five games.

Ray Lankford led off the 11th with a double, Mark Whiten singled and Alicea hit a one-out triple down the first-base line. Erik Pappas doubled off Rojas (1-2) to drive in Alicea.

Reliever Rheal Cormier (2-3) retired the only batter he faced in the 10th inning to get the victory. Lee Smith earned his 13th save with a perfect 11th.

Montreal tied the game in the eighth on Moises Alou's sacrifice fly. Pinch-hitter Lou Frazier singled and pinch-hitter Darrin Fletcher sacrificed. Delino DeShields walked before John Vander Wal hit an infield single to load the bases against Rene Arocha.

St. Louis took a 1-0 lead when Whiten drew a bases-loaded walk from Jeff Shaw in the sixth inning. Shaw, lifted after the sixth, allowed just one hit, struck out two and walked four.

Indian pitches 1-hitter against Rangers

CLEVELAND — Rookie Tom Kramer pitched a one-hitter in only his second major-league start, giving up Julio Franco's fourth-inning home run but nothing else as the Cleveland Indians beat the Texas Rangers 4-1 Monday night.

The 25-year-old Kramer (1-1) earned his first career win, striking out eight and walking none in an impressive audition for a permanent job in the Indians' shaky rotation. He has made 17 appearances this year and 21 in his career, all but two of them in relief.

Kramer faced 28 hitters, one over the minimum and teammate Paul Sorrento backed him with two home runs, his 10th and 11th of the year.

Kevin Brown (4-3) lost his second consecutive decision, yielding four runs and eight hits in his major league-leading sixth complete game.

Blue Jays 4, Brewers 1

TORONTO — Devon White hit two home runs, and Dave Stewart (5-1) gave up two hits in seven inning to Milwaukee, leading Toronto to its fifth straight victory.

White, hit loser Mike Boddicker's first pitch of the game over the fence in right for a 1-0 Blue Jays lead.

American League

After Alfredo Griffin erased Pat Borders' leadoff walk with a fielder's choice, White hit Boddicker's 2-2 pitch to right for his sixth home run of the season and a 4-0 Blue Jays lead in the fourth.

White's two-homer game was the fourth of his career and second since coming to the Blue Jays in 1991. His last two-homer game came in Minnesota on June 1, 1992.

Orioles 8, Yankees 6

NEW YORK — Cal Ripken Jr., in a slump much of the season, led off the seventh inning with a tie-breaking home run and the Baltimore Orioles went on to beat the New York Yankees 8-6 Monday night.

Ripken's homer stalled a Yankees comeback that included a pair of home runs by Kevin Maas, erasing a 6-1 Orioles lead.

Maas' home runs included a three-run shot off Rick Sutcliffe (5-2) that capped a four-run sixth to tie the score 6-all.

Ripken, batting .209 with three homers entering the game, opened the seventh by driving a 2-2 pitch from Andy Cook (0-1) over the left-center field wall to make it 7-6. The Baltimore shortstop has played in 1,778 consecutive games, only behind Lou Gehrig's all-time record of 2,130.

Chris Hoiles hit a three-run homer, his sixth, off Yankees starter Jim Abbott to highlight a six-run fifth inning. Brady Anderson added an RBI double and Mark McLemore had a two-run single.

Red Sox 6, Tigers 5, (10 innings)

DETROIT — Scott Cooper hit a two-out triple in the 10th inning and scored on Bob Zupcic's double as Boston beat Detroit.

Cooper was credited with a triple after the ball scooted past center fielder Milt Cuyler's diving attempt at a shoestring catch. He scored when Zupcic doubled off reliever Bob MacDonald (3-2).

Ken Ryan (1-0) pitched the ninth and got credit for the victory. Jeff Russell got the final three outs for his 11th save for the Red Sox.

The first-place Tigers scored four runs on six hits in the eighth inning to tie it at 5.

Canadiens advance to Stanley Cup final

MONTREAL (AP) — Just as the celebration was starting, the Montreal Canadiens recalled that they are still four wins short of their goal.

"But it still feels good for tonight to win," center Kirk Muller said Monday night after the Canadiens beat the New York Islanders 5-2 to advance to the Stanley Cup final for the 33rd time.

"A lot of us haven't been this far before," Muller said. "We worked hard for it but we know we'll have to get right back to work."

The Canadiens won the best-of-7 Wales Conference final series four games to one and earned a rest before the championship round. Montreal will seek its 24th Stanley Cup in a series beginning June 1 against the winner of the Campbell Conference final, currently tied 2-2 between the Toronto Maple Leafs and the Los Angeles Kings.

"It's a team goal and this is just the third step," forward Brian Bellows said. "I'm excited, but I won't get overly dramatic about tonight. We've still got a long way to go."

The Canadiens exchanged hugs and smiles but refused to ham it up too much after receiving the conference championship trophy.

The Canadiens, who won twice in overtime in the series, were determined not to return to New York for a sixth game against the Islanders, who had already established themselves as masters of comebacks by twice rebounding to upset the Stanley Cup champion Pittsburgh Penguins in the Patrick Division final.

The Canadiens had a record-tying 11-game playoff winning streak ended last Saturday night in New York when the Islanders forced a fifth game with a 4-1 victory.

"We had a good talk this morning before our skate," Bellows said. "We said tonight's the night. We have to do it. We can't let it get any longer."

"We got the team effort we didn't get in Game 4," said winger John LeClair, whose hitting and aggressive forechecking set the tone for Montreal. "We definitely didn't want to go back to New York."

"If you want it in a nutshell, the two overtime games were the key," New York forward Ray Ferraro said. "We had the chances and didn't score in them."

Muller and Mike Keane scored in the first period for Montreal and Bellows, Damphousse and Jean-Jacques Daigneault added goals in the second.

Steve Thomas scored for the Islanders in the second period and Benoit Hogue got a goal in the third.

A Forum crowd of 17,959 began chanting in the second period after a goal by Bellows made it 5-0.

"It sure feels great," Bellows said. "We had the killer instinct tonight."

him home. He was thrown out trying to advance to second on a passed ball, but the Benji Kaber, Brad Schmeh and Jake Suffian went deep, one after the other. That made it 7-4, but CSI tacked on three of its own in the top of the fourth, two of them coming off a home run by Tom Walker, the first of two for the first baseman.

And after Chris McClure homered for Trinidad in the fourth, the floodgates opened.

The Eagles sent 11 men to the plate in the fifth inning, scoring six runs on five hits and an error.

and yes, there was a home run, by Schorr. And the Eagles weren't done. They added four runs in the sixth, getting back-to-back homers from Walker (three runs) and Devon Chavez (solo, but a towering shot to left).

Two more scored in the seventh and then it got ridiculous: seven runs on four hits in the eighth. Again, there were back-to-back home runs from Chavez and Brian Keswick. Three batters were hit in the inning and three more were walked.

"When it was 7-4 and we hit those home runs, I thought we had a chance," Girratano said. "We made some mistakes. We put a couple of kids in and they couldn't get anybody out and we struggled with that."

"Once we got down 12, 15 runs, it was one of those days where you end it and come back tomorrow," he added.

They'll play today to put an end to the deciding game to see which will reach the National Junior College Baseball World Series, which begins Saturday in Grand Junction.

In the first game, CSI took advantage of early errors to score seven runs including a two-run home run by Sean Garman. Trinidad got a two-run shot from Jasen Jameson, but was down 8-2 in the fourth, when the Trojans exploded. They scored eight runs, with the big blast coming from Brian Esterline, a grand slam home run that tied the game 8-8. They picked up two more runs in the inning and put it away with two more in the fifth and got a solo shot from Esterline in the seventh.

"Both teams are pretty evenly matched," Girratano said. "We both can hit and they were a little stronger pitching-wise today. In the second game when we got down, we certainly weren't going to show our 3,4,5,6 guys. We went deep in our staff and deep in our staff just didn't get it done today."

Both coaches say they've got enough pitching left for that third game.

"Who knows? We've got to come back tomorrow and maybe score another 20 runs," Walker said.

Trinidad will have to soothe its wounded pride from the second-game spanking. It was only the third time in four years the Trojans have had the mercy rule invoked.

"It's going to be hard, but I think with the character of this club, they'll come back and be ready to play," Girratano said.

Reflections on a rare glimpse of lost grandeur

You can tell we've been too long in a drought when people line up for a $2 peek at running water.

An unusual mood has ruled Shoshone Falls Park in the past week: as festive as Disneyland, as reverential as a pilgrimage.

A procession of the faithful climbs endlessly down the steel steps to the viewing platform, where people gently jostle one another for positions at the rail. Many of them bring children who are too young to remember the last time the ancient falls roared so mightily.

"See all the water, kids? Do you remember how dry it was last year?"

The pilgrimage is a rite of passage – a passing down of local lore from generation to generation. The children watch the torrent spill and splash, and they marvel at the mist that rises to the canyon rim – and that kisses the pilgrims' foreheads and cheeks as if to bless them.

If the children are fortunate enough to be in the company of a grandparent, the old-timer may lean over and say, "This is pretty good, but you should have seen it when it was really running. When we get home remind me to show you my pictures."

Truly, the spectacle that has caused such a fuss this year is small by comparison with the crashing cascades of earlier times. Glorious as it is, it cannot match the gushing horseshoe in Thomas Moran's famous turn-of-the-century painting.

Moran painted the falls five years before Milner Dam choked off the river's flow. Viewed from the perspective of prolonged drought, Moran's image seems more fantasy than fact – how could so much water be possible?

But this year – when an overabundance of water above the dam allows a prodigal spillover at the falls – a person can imagine a time when all the broad terrace atop the falls was alive with churning water.

For a moment, standing entranced at the rail, the pilgrim feels a pang of guilt. How we have sinned! the pilgrim thinks. What an abomination to enslave this great river to serve our greed!

The spell passes as we climb the switchbacks to the canyon rim. Up here are crops to be watered, mouths to be fed, bills to be paid.

Ninety years ago, we chose to have farms and towns and commerce in this valley, and for those things we sacrificed a great waterfall. Few of us, given the choice, would back out of the bargain now.

Still, once in a while, when the river gathers its strength and briefly overcomes its bonds, we humbly trek to the water's edge and contemplate the magnificence that was.

British may be tried for Falklands war crimes

Jack McKinney

British accents have been absent from the chorus of angry voices calling for war crimes trials when the fighting finally ends in former Yugoslavia.

It's not that the Brits are such forgiving souls. More likely it's because they're worried about alleged war crimes of their own.

London police have been investigating claims that British paratroopers executed Argentine prisoners after they'd surrendered during a major battle of the 1982 Falklands War.

At least three of their victims were said to be "American mercenaries" who fought for Argentina in that 74-day conflict.

According to one former paratrooper, the captured mercenaries were not shot despite being Americans but because they were.

When asked how it was learned the captives were "Yanks," another para was quoted as saying:

"They told us. That was their mistake."

The first report that Americans may have fought for Argentina was published in August 1982, after a journalist heard it from Jeffrey Logan, a wounded private with the 3rd Battalion of the British Paratroop Regiment.

On that occasion, Logan said the captive Yanks had joked the war was over for them "and that the British would have to send them back to America."

Logan's claim went largely unnoticed at the time, but it was recalled after the 1991 publication of a shocking memoir by Vincent Bramley; a former corporal with the unit known as 3 Para.

In that book, "Excursion to Hell" Bramley claimed the Americans were among a group of prisoners killed, and in some cases also mutilated, in the savage battle of Mount Longdon which climaxed the war.

It was Bramley's account that prompted Defense Secretary Malcolm Rifkind to demand a full inquiry by the London Metropolitan Police. More than 130 present and former "paras," including Bramley, have been interrogated in that probe – still ongoing after 14 months.

In his book, Bramley quotes an unnamed "mate" who saw the executions carried out by a para he identifies only as "X."

Describing how he and "X" encountered three of the enemy who wanted to surrender, the unnamed source told Bramley how surprised he was when it appeared the captives weren't native Argentines.

"We questioned them for some minutes," he said. "All spoke perfect English, praising our soldiering."

But the flattery got the prisoners nowhere. After apparently conferring with an officer, a sergeant relayed a command to "X," who "suddenly let rip, shooting them all dead."

The source told Bramley, "Look mate, they were Yanks. Orders came from above to waste them."

Although Bramley won't name either man, a third witness confirmed the executions to Luke Jennings, a reporter for Britain's Sunday Independent.

"I saw an American passport, and I heard and spoke to those Americans," this third para claimed. "They didn't speak Argie-type American, but with a Bronx accent, (which is) quite different."

This witness; who said he discarded the passport after using it as toilet paper, described the steps taken to make it impossible to identify the American corpses.

"H.E. (high explosive) grenades were placed in their mouths, and white phosperous grenades in their chest cavities," he recalled "The order was to completely destroy every single trace of the bodies, every scrap of evidence that they'd ever existed. And the order came from the top."

Another man, a member of the licensed-to-kill SAS (Special Air Service) told reporter Jennings of "other Yanks," captured by a different paratroop battalion in the battle of Goose Green.

As explained to Jennings, these Americans were "hot sauced (made to lie under groundsheets, beneath which phosphorus grenades were ignited)."

All of which means, wrote Jennings, that "for the first time in history there exists the possibility that British soldiers could stand trial for war crimes."

Unless findings of the police are buried in a file marked Classified.

Letters

Hollister officials resign

To the City Council and citizens of Hollister:

We, Steve Taylor, Jim Fleenor, June Dobbs and Polly Van Blaricom, resign from our positions as mayor, president of the council, council person and city clerk of Hollister effective at 5 p.m. May 20, 1993.

We have given this a great deal of thought. For our own personal reasons, we feel this is the best decision and the correct decision.

We wish to thank the citizens that have supported us these difficult times.

We know we did a difficult job to the best of our ability, and we can see and be proud that our children in Hollister have a park and playground, a much safer road to the school, garbage pickup and, also, our grant for improving the water system is in place.

It is sad that the council is no longer working as a team for the best of all citizens. The council meetings have become nit-picking, pitting-neighbor-against-neighbor sessions. Nothing toward progress is accomplished.

We feel we can no longer be part of and will not be part of a City Council that pits neighbor against neighbor and breeds hate and discontent. A council that does not show the good-neighbor policy of treating your neighbor with consideration, understanding and compassion instead breeds animosity.

Ed Padgett and Larry Bingham, you may have won the battle for now, but you cannot stop progress; truth and honesty shall win out.

Ed Padgett has made statements to the press and to citizens that there is to be an investigation by the state. We say, "Get it on." We have nothing to hide.

We apologize to those of you who supported us and feel we have let you down by resigning, but we leave you with these quotes: "To thine own self be true" and "Walk a mile in my shoes."

Conservatives selfishly take

At last I've found a little glimmer of glitter in the so-called golden years. Know what it is? It's the realization that I possibly remember more about that period of our nation's history occurring during my lifetime than many of our politicians, journalists, newscasters, editors, analysts and other pundits have probably read about. Therefore, I can now draw my own conclusion and form my own opinions about the state of our nation.

Having voted in 13 presidential elections, I have never seen any president inherit the horrendous mess – both foreign and domestic – that seems to have fallen on the shoulders of President Clinton; nor have I ever seen anything like the animosity and meanness expressed by the sore-headed losers of the opposite party.

But the worst of all appears to be the media – especially the reputedly rich members of the conservative press (both print and electronic) when they heard the very wealthy would be targeted for higher taxes.

When Sen. Robert Dole keeps raving and ranting about more taxes and the tax-and-spend liberals, has he forgotten the Reagan legacy of the borrow-and-spend era when we moved from being a creditor nation to a debtor nation with the largest deficit ever? How could any new president possibly undo such a terrible mess in his first hundred days?

It's no secret that about half of our senators are millionaires. Is it possible they could put their own self-interest above what is best for the country as a whole, whether or not their holdings are in a blind trust? It would be interesting to know where they invest their money. Have they moved it out of defense-related industries and into those related to lucrative health care? Do they own blue chip stocks in the highly profitable pharmaceutical drug companies? If so, could this be why they appear to be opposed to whatever the president wants to put on the table for a change?

How well I remember the good old days of the so-called tax-and-spend liberals. Back then, when the bureaucratic cow was stripped, those old liberals made sure that most of the milk flowed down to the ordinary people. How unlike the policies of the seemingly selfish borrow-and-spend conservatives who have not only skimmed off all the cream but have also kept most of the milk.

In view of the foregoing, I can only conclude that it is better to soak the rich and give to the poor than it is to steal from the middle class and give to the rich – who want to share our nation's wealth with neither the poor nor the middle class.

Politicians treat us well

Why do we complain? We have a wonderful bunch of politicians.

And think of how lucky we have been in electing our presidents, Carter, Reagan, Bush and Bill Clinton, all of them religious and honorable men with one thing in mind – the well being of the people. They tax us half of what we make and always want more, but they return it to us in services – beautiful parks, highways, dams, subsidies, schools, clean water, garbage dumps and I could go on.

We have the most beautiful welfare state in the world. Not only do we provide for our own people but we try to provide for the starving and downtrodden all over the world. We owe our well being to the goodness of our people by their generosity and morality, all of which are commanded of God. And we reap his blessings.

How sweet it is!

How about having taxpayers vote on spending?

James P. Pinkerton

In the No. 1 box office comedy "Dave," Kevin Kline, playing the stand-in who becomes president, has to find a way to cut $650 million from the federal budget. The White House staff tells him there's no way, so Dave calls in his accountant from back home.

The two amateurs sit with their spreadsheets and calculators and identify the cuts in an afternoon. Audiences cheer. Why? Because people recognize the essential truth of the scene – $650 million is less than 0.5 percent of all federal spending.

That's nothing. Anything – from our waistlines to our telephone bills – could be reduced by 0.5 percent with just a little discipline.

Shakespeare made frequent use of the "wise fool," the character who was crazy enough to speak the truth. Today, federal spending is so bloated that any fool can cut spending.

As Ross Perot might say, "It's the simplest thing in the world."

Milton Friedman has a radical recommendation. The Nobel Prize-winning economist spoke recently to the Cato Institute in Washington and suggested that federal programs be put up to a popular vote. Call it the "line-item referendum." Crazy idea? We don't know if the public can be trusted to manage the government, but we do know that the politicians and bureaucrats we have now can't handle it. Washington isn't even trying. Federal spending has increased 500 percent in the last 20 years. What did we get for all those trillions?

Worse services, higher taxes and, still, 12-digit deficits.

President Clinton was elected as an outsider, but evidently he accepts the insiders' argument that federal spending is "uncontrollable." Thus, on top of a $250 billion tax increase, the administration recommends that we add another trillion dollars to the deficit. The quarterbacks for the Clinton tax-and-spend plan are House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. In spite of their combined 75 years of congressional seniority, Rostenkowski and Byrd are reformers, determined to end government-as-usual. NOT!

It didn't take long for Clinton to be seduced by Washington, did it? Look what's happened to Clintol's plan for axing even the tiny honey subsidy: It's gummed up in Congress.

Clinton seems to be too busy noshing with Sharon Stone to notice. But the word is out: If the beekeepers can keep their welfare payments, then who can't? The good times will continue to roll for the mohair growers, space station builders and HUD-financed slumlords, all courtesy of Uncle Sugar.

Friedman's referendum idea is a two-by-four designed more to get the attention of the stubborn Beltway mules than to do anything constructive. Let's hope that in their anger, the voters don't swing so hard that they crack the country's constitutional skull.

Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., the House minority whip, supports a less-blunt instrument. He is pushing a non-binding "national advisory referendum" on the federal budget, starting in 1994. Gingrich argues that such a vote would focus attention on what the public really cares about: spending and the deficit. He asks: "If the Russians can use a referendum to mobilize support for Boris Yeltsin's reforms, then why shouldn't American voters be able to do the same thing?"

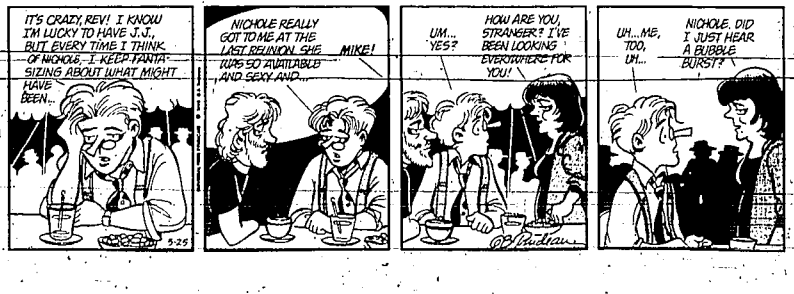

Out beyond the Washington pleasure dome, a storm is brewing. It was a restless, cynical electorate that spawned the tax revolt, term limits and the Perot campaign. Clinton should be thinking about the last president who let Congress talk him into raising taxes and still spent a trillion more than he took in.

The Sage of Kennebunkport can tell Clinton all about it – he has a lot of time on his hands!

James P. Pinkerton writes for the New York newspaper Newsday.

Khmer Rouge lets some vote

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — In a surprise move, some Khmer Rouge leaders let guerrillas and villagers in the areas they control vote Monday in U.N.-organized elections despite threats to disrupt balloting.

Khmer Rouge guerrillas in other areas prevented people from voting, but that did not keep Cambodians from flooding polling stations again on the second day of the nation's first free election in 21 years.

There was no comment from the secretive Khmer Rouge about why some people in its territory were being allowed to vote in the election, which the Marxist group had vehemently opposed for fear the Vietamese-installed government would win.

But there were indications the big turnout of voters in defiance of the Khmer Rouge's threats prompted some guerrilla leaders to change tactics. U.N. officials said the Khmer Rouge commanders who were permitting people to go to polling stations urged them to support the main opposition party, FUNCINPEC.

The party is regarded as more open to accepting the Khmer Rouge in government. Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the party's founder who quit the group after being named chairman of a reconciliation body under a 1991 peace accord, says he will try to form a government of all factions if the party wins.

The Phnom Penh government, which was put in power after invading Vietnamese troops ousted the Khmer Rouge in 1979, said it would exclude the Khmer Rouge if it won.

The Khmer Rouge had vowed to try to stop the elections and launched numerous attacks on U.N. peacekeepers in recent weeks.

But Cambodians have overwhelmingly ignored the threats. After polls closed Monday, U.N. spokesman Eric Falt said nearly 70 percent of Cambodia's 4.7 million registered voters had cast ballots. The election ends Friday.

Townships see more fighting

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Rival black groups fought gunbattles in townships near Johannesburg on Monday.

Residents said houses were burned and people were shot and killed as they fled the violence, which has raged for three days.

More than 35 people have been killed since Saturday, when supporters of the African National Congress and the Inkatha Freedom Party fought in the Tokoza township. Thirteen people died in Tokoza, and the fighting spread to other townships in an industrial area south of Johannesburg.

Thousands of Tibetans riot in protest of taxes

BEIJING (AP) — Police fired tear gas Monday on thousands of Tibetans who stoned Chinese-owned shops and a police station in the capital of Lhasa, a London-based human rights group said.

The Tibetan Information Network, citing accounts by foreigners, said 2,000 to 3,000 Tibetans took part in the protest over taxes.

It said there were reports that one person was killed.

The exact reason for the protest was not immediately known.

China's official news media did not mention the protest.

African province of Eritrea formally declares independence

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — The former Ethiopian province of Eritrea declared itself the world's newest nation Monday, two years after winning a 30-year war of independence.

The country's new red, blue and green flag with a yellow olive branch was raised during a midnight ceremony Sunday in the capital Asmara. Newly elected President Isaias Afewerki called it a "moment of joy and resurrection."

Eritreans voted overwhelmingly for independence in a referendum last month after three decades of fighting for secession from Ethiopia.

The Horn of Africa country, the size of Britain and located on the Red Sea, requested full membership in the United Nations last Friday. Several nations, including the United States, Italy, Sudan and Ethiopia, have recognized it.

The formal independence declaration came two years to the day after Eritreans captured the capital, as longtime dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam's rule collapsed.

An estimated 160,000 fighters and 40,000 civilians died in the war.

Ethiopia President Meles Zenawi was among foreign dignitaries at the independence ceremony, which capped a day of parades, street dances and fireworks.

Research activities jump at ISU

POCATELLO — Research activities at ISU State University are up from last year and a large jump from six years ago.

And Ed House, ISU dean of graduate studies and research, believes that despite federal belt-tightening, the upward trend will continue in years to come.

He said when final figures are known, externally-funded research projects through the school year may total $8.5 million, compared with $7.8 million last year, and up dramatically from $1.4 million in 1987.

Two major areas include environmental cleanup and medical research. The lead department has been Biological Sciences, which begins up to 10 large projects each year, and more than half of all "extramural" dollars awarded by federal agencies.

Of the many research strides in the past year, House said those of the new Institute for Environmental Health and Safety probably take the lead.

Family with dynamite won't face charge

CHUBBUCK — A family storing sticks of dynamite which forced the evacuation of nearby residents will not be charged, Chubbuck Police Chief Jerry Rowland says.

"I don't think these people meant any malicious harm," Rowland said. "We're trying to encourage people who have dynamite or explosives to call. We'll assist them in disposing of it."

Residents from two mobile home parks and people in a supermarket were evacuated last Friday.

Archie Moon, his wife Ireta and their two sons have been using dynamite to work a gold and silver mine in Oneida County for more than 60 years, Mrs. Moon said, adding it has never gone off unintentionally.

This year they have not used it, she said. There were only seven sticks of dynamite in one small box, she said.

Crowd gathers to mourn AIDS deaths

BOISE — About 200 people gathered at the Idaho Shakespeare Festival Amphitheater in Boise to remember loved ones who have died of AIDS and to show support for people now living with the HIV virus that causes the fatal disease.

"AIDS is a disease, that's all," Anita Turner, an Idaho AIDS Foundation volunteer, read from a letter she wrote to a friend on Sunday.

Her childhood friend earlier had wondered why Turner volunteered to help those with a disease that affects homosexuals.

The annual AIDS Candlelight Memorial ended with a candlelit walk. It opened with a Native American blessing ceremony. Sixty-six names submitted by participants were read recognizing those who have died.

Floaters continue running high river

BOISE — Despite repeated warnings by officials to stay away from the Boise River, rescuers had to pull people from the overflowing river after a raft overturned.

And the river continued to flood homes along its banks Sunday.

None of the four unidentified rafters were injured on Sunday.

Doug Hardman, emergency-management director for the Ada County Planning Association, said no significant increases in flood damage were reported.

The worst flooding has been near Eagle Island State Park. Hardman advised people living near the river to prepare for the possibility of more flooding.

Attorneys expect execution soon

NAMPA (AP) — Idaho Solicitor General Lynn Thomas and Nampa defense attorney Van Bishop are on opposite sides of the fence over the death penalty.

But the two litigators agree an execution is likely in Idaho within the next few years, and could come by the end of 1993.

Thomas, a proponent of capital punishment, said two forces are coming together which will make carrying out an execution likely.

"Many of the earlier cases of those currently on Death Row have been through litigation and we're coming to a point where avenues of appeal are exhausted," Thomas said.

And he thinks federal roadblocks that have thwarted states' efforts to carry out sentences may be weakening.

"Several judges on the 9th Circuit Court (of Appeals) have attempted in every way to hold up cases," he said. "That has been our biggest obstacle."

There are 23 inmates on Idaho's Death Row.

Bishop, who has represented many of them, said there are no "hot issues blocking the way."

Recent rulings in the case of Death Row inmate Thomas Eugene Creech have ironed out glitches in the law as to vagueness of aggravating circumstances, Bishop said.

In March 1991, the 9th Circuit Court ruled Idaho's death penalty statutes were "unconstitutionally vague." That ruling was reversed earlier this year during Creech's resentencing.

"If society says we're going to have capital punishment — and the majority of society seems to be in favor of it — then society is misinformed as to its benefits," Bishop said, noting it does not deter murder and is more expensive than keeping an inmate in prison for life.

Bishop said many may favor the death penalty because of fears early paroles will be granted. He noted, however, Idaho has a life without parole sentence that can only be commuted through clemency granted by the governor.

The Nampa attorney is critical of how death sentences are implemented in Idaho, where final decisions can be made by one judge.

"If society wants this, shouldn't sentences be implemented by a jury representative of society?" Bishop said. "Even if a prosecutor in Idaho does not seek the death penalty, a judge can and that has happened more than once in this state's history."

Bishop notes the state of Washington, where there are three times more first-degree murder charges than in Idaho, has less than one-third the number of individuals on Death Row.

"In Washington, juries make the decisions," he said, "and juries look more at the ethical and mitigating factors of a case. That only makes sense when you've got 12 people working on a decision, not just one."

The jury process most often ensures death sentences are handed down only in exceptional cases — like serial killer Ted Bundy's — "where the risk of re-offense is tremendous and the death penalty is called for," Bishop said.

Bishop and Thomas agree the state realizes no cost savings through capital punishment, even though the Idaho Department of Corrections puts the cost of housing a maximum security inmate at $19,126 per year, not including medical or rehabilitation costs.

Any cost savings of not funding the daily expenses of an inmate are surpassed by an extensive legal process connected with a capital case.

"The (9th U.S) Circuit) Court of Appeals has made it so expensive, hoping that states will abandon it," Thomas said. "Counties have given up on capital cases because they cost too much."

While Thomas favors capital punishment, he notes his main focus is representing the state in death sentence appeals.

"But in my opinion, with these kinds of crimes the message has to be that society will not tolerate," Thomas said. In states like Texas where executions have become a regular occurrence capital punishment has served as a deterrent for heinous crimes, he said.

Superintendents push bond issue election changes

BOISE (AP) — Idaho school district administrators say a two-thirds majority required for passage of construction bonds puts them at a disadvantage before they even start a campaign.

"The problem with bond elections is the two-thirds majority," says Everett Howard, superintendent of the McCall-Donnelly School District, where a bond vote last Tuesday fell 3 percentage points short of the 66.7 percent required. "It is imperative that the Legislature be cooperative in lowering the two-thirds requirement or they are going to have to come up with dollars to fund construction."

A majority of the school bond elections that failed in Ada, Canyon and Valley counties in the past year would have passed if a simple majority vote was required. However, State Schools Superintendent Jerry Evans says changing the two-thirds requirement could be more difficult than passing a bond with it.

"It has been looked at by a number of individual and groups for a number of years and they have recommended that it be changed," he said. "But after they look at it and see that requires changing the constitution, they back off."

Evans said Idaho voters would question the wisdom of a change in the state Constitution that would make it easier for school districts to go into debt and raise taxes to cover the bond payments.

He suggested the solution to the $700 million needed for school building improvements lies in more state assistance to school districts.

The Idaho Supreme Court may have added weight to that argument in March when it ruled that state facilities requirements for schools could be a standard districts must meet to provide a thorough education, Evans said.

"It's clear that the Supreme Court said districts can make the case in court in regard to facilities and how they must be improved to meet the thoroughness standards," he said. "I would think that would help them significantly in making the case ... that they do not have the capability to provide a thorough education."

Port hired top officials' family members, records show

LEWISTON (AP) — Port of Lewiston Manager F. Ron McMurray's daughter, Cari, was paid $1,512 last year by a port-employed consultant to develop a report about ethanol plants, port records show.

And the port paid two daughters of McMurray's administrative assistant, Diane Hausen, a total of $1,925.28 for work between February 1991 and April 1992, according to port records.

And the port financed Cari McMurray's $115 flight to Boise and back for work tied to the ethanol plant report, and a $159 flight to Portland, Ore., for Hausen's husband to accompany his wife on a tugboat ride back to Lewiston.

Records also indicate the port has routinely paid for meals for the wives of port officials during an annual lobbying trip to Washington, D.C., and sometimes on other trips.

"These are all issues that can be construed positively and negatively," said Port of Lewiston Commission President Peter Wilson. "You try to do a job and do it right, and someone can always take exception to decisions that anyone makes."

Wilson said he had no problems with Cari McMurray working for Group 2000, a port consultant, nor with the port employing Hausen's daughters, Rolanda and Reneta Lobdell, on a part-time basis.

"That was a part-time job and those girls stepped forward and seized an opportunity and did quite capable work," Wilson said.

Murder trial begins in Gooding County

GOODING – A Gooding County man goes on trial today on first-degree murder charges in connection with last summer's slaying of a farm worker.

Jeffrey Thomas, 21, had attempted in April to plead guilty to second-degree murder in the case to avoid a death sentence if convicted of first-degree murder. Fifth District Judge Daniel Meehl rejected the plea.

Meehl will preside over jury selection for two days, beginning at 9:30 a.m. today. The trial is expected to last two weeks.

Sacremento Aguilar, 46, of Guanajuato, Mexico, was found dead in his car beside a road in southwestern Gooding County Aug. 31, 1992.

He had been shot several times with a .38-caliber semi-automatic handgun. He had been employed in Jerome and Gooding counties as a farm worker for 22 years.

Meehl on April 6 rejected Thomas' first attempt to plead guilty after Thomas said the shooting was unintentional and in self-defense.

At a later hearing, Thomas withdrew his guilty plea.

Kimberly students plan band concert Wednesday

KIMBERLY – A band concert will be presented by seventh-grade, eighth-grade and high school students 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the City Park.

The concert will feature marches and contemporary American music.

Choir students from the same grades will present a pops concert in the park at 7:30 Thursday evening.

Vandals leave Jerome schools in a mess over the weekend

JEROME – Graffiti, broken doors, shattered windows and foam from fire extinguishers greeted Jerome High School students Monday morning.

Central Elementary School also had unwanted visitors who damaged books, stole cash from several places and then threw books onto the roof of the school, Principal Betty Hyder said.

Both incidents are under investigation.

Twin Falls County landfills will close holiday weekend

TWIN FALLS – The Twin Falls County landfills will close Sunday and Monday for the Memorial Day holiday.

The county operates a main landfill south of Twin Falls and a satellite landfill near Buhl, as well as a transfer station near Murtaugh that accepts only household wastes.

The landfills will reopen Tuesday, June 1, at 8 p.m.

The Murtaugh station will reopen the following Friday for its regular operating days of Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

District gears up for graduation

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Naming the new Twin Falls High School auditorium and an all-night party at the College of Southern Idaho's Expo Center are just two activities planned for graduation week.

The School Board is soliciting ideas for naming the 1,500-seat auditorium this week so that by Friday it can select a name, Superintendent Terrell Donicht said.

The board will meet at noon Friday in the district office building, 201 Main Ave. W.

The district will announce the name at commencement exercises that night, Donicht said. People can call the district office at 733-6900 or come to the Friday meeting to give their suggestions, Donicht said.

High School student body President Kirk Black and several other students have requested that the auditorium be named after clothier John Roper, who was a leader in getting the size of the auditorium increased from 1,000 seats.

No one else has suggested a different name for the auditorium, Donicht said.

The School Board has decided not to name the new elementary school in South Park until after school starts in the fall, he said.

Other events include:

- The senior picnic Thursday at Dierkes Lake.
- Commencement ceremonies for 377 high school graduates at 8 p.m. Friday in CSI's gym. Dr. Roy Strawser, who retired as academic dean of the College of Southern Idaho last year, will give the commencement address.
- A graduation party hosted by the Parent Teacher Student Association from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. at the CSI Expo Center, where students can gamble play money in a "casino," eat food or play volleyball, Frisbee or pingpong.

The party will cost $12 per person.

At midnight, hypnotist Jack Lythgoe will perform; and then the Eddie Haskel band and Stone Freeze will perform. Shuttles will take kids to and from Treasure Cove and a bowling alley every half hour.

The "all-nighter" is intended to entertain students in a positive way, Donicht said.

"Kids used to go out and pretty much get plastered," he said.

Rescue workers, including divers training nearby, assist Rick Box of Twin Falls Monday after he jumped from a 60-foot cliff into Hidden Lake. Rescuers carried Box from the remote location to the end of nearby Dierkes Lake where a Twin Falls County sheriff's boat was waiting to take him to an ambulance. He was taken to Twin Falls Clinic and Hospital where he was treated and released, said his mother, Kathy Box. A person who identified himself as 'Dragon Man' continues diving into the water.

Falls draw record numbers

By Annalise Taylor
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — This past weekend might have produced the largest turnout ever at Shoshone Falls, said Chad Browning, superintendent of the City Parks and Recreation Department.

Between Friday morning and Sunday evening, 4,861 cars made the trek to see the falls, generating $9,722 for the city.

"I don't ever remember taking in that much," Browning said.

Browning estimated the park's previous three-day record at 1,600 cars.

On Sunday alone, 2,495 cars visited the park, Browning said.

The actual number of people to visit the park is unknown, he said, because park attendants don't count how many people are in each car.

Even the figure for vehicles probably is low, Browning said. People who went to the falls before the toll booth opened at 7 a.m., or after it closed at 9 p.m., weren't counted.

The crowds were drawn by the unusually high water flowing over the falls, a condition that won't last long.

The excess water was turned off at noon Monday, and the river below Milner Dam is now back down to its regular flow of 200 cubic feet per second, said Mike Beus of the Bureau of Reclamation.

On Monday, approximately 425 cars came to visit Shoshone Falls and Dierkes Lakes.

Medicaid patients take standard ills to emergency room

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Medicaid patients who do not have a regular doctor are going to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's emergency room for anything from colds to tonsillitis, a report says.

Bonnie Brown, of Brown Consulting Associates in Kimberly, said she found that in 1992, Medicaid patients went to the hospital's emergency room for sicknesses that could have been handled in doctor's offices for much less money.

Of 2,755 emergency room visits by Medicaid patients in 1992, 1,481 treatments, or 54 percent, were unnecessarily handled in the hospital's emergency room at a cost of almost $170,000, Brown said.

But if the same patients had been treated in doctor's offices, their care would have cost about $50,000, Brown's study found.

Of the unnecessary emergency room visits, 356 were for ear infections — usually

Bond problem delays regional landfill plan

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

RUPERT – A multicounty landfill plan hit a snag Monday when the counties were forced to admit in court that their bonds are improperly worded.

The Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District had hoped to argue the reasons for issuing the bonds without voter approval.

But before a judge can determine if the district's bond-issue plan is legal, the district must reword the bonds.

This will delay a hearing on the landfill financing plan for several weeks. The district comprises Blaine, Lincoln, Jerome, Gooding, Minidoka and Cassia counties.

District officials, opponents of the plan and other interested citizens gathered in the courtroom of 5th District Judge J. William Hart.

Lawyers talked about two issues raised by Howard and Mary Conrad of the Burley area. The Conrads own land on Burley Butte where a Boise-based trash firm has started work on a private landfill.

Idaho law states that regional solid-waste districts, political subdivisions in the district and the state cannot be held liable for debt incurred when regional solid-waste districts issue bonds. Any bonds issued by a regional waste district must state this.

The bonds that the Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District planned to sell do not state this, conceded J. Evan Robertson, an attorney for the waste district.

After learning of the Conrads' objection late last week, "we discovered that the allegation was correct," Robertson said.

The bonds will be reworded to conform with state law, he said. This will take at least a couple of weeks.

That done, the district must republish legal notices that it will ask the court to OK its plan to issue the bonds without voter approval. The district must give five weeks' notice, meaning a hearing on the plan's legality will not take place until July.

The Conrads, represented by Burley attorney Randy Stone, also contend that the district must do more than publish legal notices of its intent to issue bonds.

The waste district has, in effect, filed suit against the taxpayers of six counties by seeking to encumber them with the debt of the bonds, Stone said.

Citing U.S. Supreme Court cases, he said the district must notify individual taxpayers of the intent to issue the bonds.

When the district can get taxpayer names from voting, property and motor vehicle records, it must notify every individual of its intent, he said.

"The only safe course of action is to personally serve (the taxpayers)," Stone said.

But Gary Slette, who also represents the waste district, said the cases that Stone cited involved property condemnation and forfeitures. "The type of issues being addressed was nowhere near similar to the type of proceeding before the court today," Slette said.

Slette questioned whether notifying thousands of individual property owners in six counties was practical or reasonable.

Judge Hart will consider the issue, and in the meantime attorneys representing the district, Stone and 10 Magic Valley residents objecting to the plan to issue bonds without holding elections will submit briefs on the case.

Terry Schultz, solid-waste district director, said Monday that "a delay would postpone work on the landfill by a couple of weeks. The district has chosen a landfill site on Milner Butte in west Cassia County.

County plans pro-landfill onslaught

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Among the interested observers at a Monday court hearing on the regional waste district's financing plan were the Twin Falls County commissioners.

"We're wishing the district a lot of luck and success," Commission Chairman Jim Fraley said after the hearing.

Getting Twin Falls County voters to pass a $4 million landfill bond issue on June 8 remains their No. 1 priority, said

Aging conference focuses on health issues

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Health-care issues dominated a question-and-answer session Monday during the 1993 State Conference on Aging.

Many senior citizens at the conference, being held this week on the College of Southern Idaho campus, demanded to know why the Republican-controlled Legislature rejected Gov. Cecil Andrus' proposal for a statewide "respite care" program this year.

Respite services use trained volunteers to give family members a break from the demands of caring for frail, elderly relatives. In his budget proposal for the 1994 fiscal year, Andrus proposed spending $168,000 to set up and administer respite programs through each of the six area agencies on aging.

Statewide, 700 to 750 families each would have received 40 to 45 hours of respite services in the program's first year.

However, the Legislature rejected Andrus' proposal. Rep. Maxine Bell, a panelist at the conference, said that was because the funding was tied to Andrus' tax-restructuring package, and when that package died there was no money in the rest of the budget for respite services.

"This was one of those tough choices we had to make," said Bell, a Jerome Republican who sits on the House-Senate budget committee. "We couldn't find any money for new programs."

Bell added that 8,500 hours of respite care services are already being funded by the state.

However, several seniors – including moderator Bethine Church – said that by allowing elderly people to be cared for in their own homes instead of nursing homes, fully-funded respite services would reduce Medicaid and Medicare expenses.

A Pocatello man was concerned about the stability of the catastrophic care program, under which counties have pooled their money to pay extremely high hospital bills for people unable to do so on their own.

The state was supposed to take over responsibility for the "cat fund" from the counties this year. However, Andrus vetoed the cat fund money after the Legislature failed to fund a separate program, the "medically needy" program.

"This has been an ongoing battle for three years, and whether it will ever be resolved I don't know," said Senate Majority Leader Joyce McRoberts, R-Twin Falls.

Andrus has repeatedly insisted that the cat fund and medically needy programs go hand in hand, and that he'd made a deal with the Legislature to fund both or neither.

But McRoberts said Monday that rather than leave medically needy alive but unfunded, lawmakers should have repealed the program entirely.

Senior advocate Jack Richmond expressed disappointment and frustration with legislation regulating mobile homes that the Legislature passed this year, charging it had been "stampeded" through in the closing days of the session.

Lobbyists for mobile-home tenants and landlords dueled for much of the 1993 session over mobile-home regulations. Landlords won most of those fights.

"We have a feeling this was railroaded through by special interests," Richmond said.

Jerome reserve deputy pulls woman to safety

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME – Reserve Deputy Dan Chatterton pulled a suicidal woman to safety Friday night on an I-84 overpass.

Passersby saw the woman hanging by her hands above the high-speed traffic and called the Jerome County sheriff at about 10:30 p.m.

Sheriff George Silver III, Deputy Gerald Brant, and Chatterton responded to the call.

The woman was yelling that she wanted to die and would let go and drop if anyone came near her, according to the sheriff's report. Her name was not disclosed.

As Chatterton tried to talk her out of the suicide attempt, the woman asked for a cigarette, which the deputy threw to her. She also yelled for a light. Chatterton told her a lighter would break if he threw it, but he offered to light her cigarette with a match.

As the woman leaned toward the match, Chatterton grabbed her arm and held her against the bridge railing until Silver and Brant were able to close in and pull her over the bridge to safety.

"Chatterton did an excellent job of talking to her and keeping her from jumping," Silver said.

The woman was released for counseling help, Silver said.

Chatterton is on paid suspension from the Twin Falls Police Department and faces criminal assault and illegal arrest charges in an Aug. 16, 1992 incident. Chatterton has said he is innocent of the charges.

Otter speaks to Kuna students on perils of alcohol, drug abuse

KUNA (AP) — Lt. Gov. Butch Otter, sentenced to community service on a drunken driving conviction this spring, was in the stump Monday, speaking about the perils of alcohol and drug abuse at the King Royal Circus in Kuna. Jory Hall, a local businesswoman, asked Otter to give the brief talk because of the problems post-graduation parties create for teen-agers. "If somebody says, 'Hey, look, this is what I did, and it got me in all this trouble,' they'll tend to look at that more than just statistics," Hall said.

Idaho official pushes rights on public lands

The Associated Press

Idaho Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa has asked a congressional subcommittee to protect historical rights-of-way through public lands.

Cenarrusa testified Monday before the House Subcommittee on National Parks, Forests and Public Lands, chaired by Rep. Bruce Vento, D-Minn. Congressman Larry LaRocco, D-Idaho, also serves on the panel.

Legislation from Vento would fund U.S. Bureau of Land Management activities for budget years 1994 through 1997, plus other oversight of Interior Department lands.

The Idaho Republican said the measure is an attempt to impose abandonment procedures for roads and rights-of-way that have historically been protected by states rights.

The House resolution "is an attempt in which the federal government seeks to impose its collective will against the rights of individuals and the various public lands states," he said.

Idaho relies on its school endowment lands to provide money for education. If the state property loses public access and becomes "landlocked," less money will come in, he said.

Minidoka commissioners hear about judicial needs

By John J. Harberth
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – Busy courts in Rupert and Burley need another magistrate judge and more room, Magistrate Judge Larry Duff told the Minidoka County commissioners Monday.

With increasing caseloads, "there is an inability to do the work that needs to be done," Duff said.

Each of the three magistrate judges in Cassia and Minidoka counties handles about 50-60 cases, he said. A jury trial may have to wait two or three months, he said.

Duff suggested turning the juvenile probation offices in the Minidoka County Courthouse into a hearing room to ease the bottleneck. Commissioner Norman Seibold said the building, which houses both the District and Magistrate courts, needs to be reorganized.

Public Defender Doug Whipple said the court jam will worsen during the summer, especially juvenile cases.

Whipple said the county needs to look at programs involving athletics, recreation and schools, which keep the kids away from crime.

He suggested looking to other communities for successful programs, "We don't want to re-invent the wheel," he said.

Whipple said the parents also need to be included.

"Anytime a juvenile comes through the system with his parents involved, it's very seldom that we see that kid again," he said.

Sheriff Paul Fries said his department is working to build better relations between the police and kids through meetings.

In other action, the commissioners held a salvage auction for an equipment building at the landfill, which is being closed.

Commissioner Seibold said the building needs to be torn down within 30 days.

Mike Zemke was awarded the building for a bid of $1,800.

The landfill will be closed and a new transfer station will be built as part of a plan by the Southern Idaho Regional Solid Waste District.

The plan calls for a new landfill and for a transfer station in each of the district's six counties.

Seibold said Minidoka County will build the first transfer station.

The commissioners also accepted a bid of $5,985 from Clare Teeter to build a fence around the current landfill. Woodstone Inc. bid $10,800.

Jarrod L. Mills

TWIN FALLS – Jarrod Leigh Mills, 18, of Twin Falls, died at his home on Saturday evening, May 22, 1993.

He was born Jan. 21, 1975, in Simi Valley, Calif., and lived in southern California until the age of 10 when his family moved to Twin Falls.

Jarrod loved the outdoors and camping with his brother, Mike, and friends in the wilderness. Jarrod especially enjoyed model railroading and had an extraordinary talent for drawing. His favorite subjects were cars and trucks, which he sketched in amazing detail.

He was a member of the Idaho National Guard and was attending Twin Falls High School.

Survivors include his mother, Robin and stepfather, Jack Kirby of Twin Falls; father, Ross Mills of California; brother, Lance Corporal Michael Ross Mills of California; sister, Caitlin Anne Kirby of Twin Falls; grandmother, Marjorie N. Rothbart of San Diego, Calif.; great-grandmother, Helen Rosenbaum of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and many aunts-uncles and cousins.

Private family services will be held at a later date. Cremation took place at White Crematory, and the family will scatter his ashes in the Sawtooth National Forest near Galena Summit. Arrangements are under the direction of White Mortuary in Twin Falls.

Marvin C. Dahlin

TWIN FALLS – Marvin C. Dahlin, 82, of Twin Falls, died Thursday, May 20, 1993, at West Magic Care Center in Twin Falls.

He was born June 20, 1910, in Scoby, Mont., the son of Axel and Clara Skoglin Dahlin. He married Gracie Lozier on June 7, 1958, in Elko, Nev. Marvin was very active in the Twin Falls area and owned two bars here, including the Barrel Inn. He also had his own body shop and garage called Dahlin Garage and sponsored a car called "6 and 7/8" in the hot rod races. He enjoyed music and was active in three bands.

Survivors include one son, John C. Dahlin of Filer; one daughter, Leah Hendriks of Twin Falls; eight grandchildren; six great-grandchildren; and one brother, Orvil Dahlin of Michigan. He was preceded in death by his wife on April 9, 1983; his parents; one brother, and one son, Jerry Dahlin.

A graveside funeral service will be held at 11 a.m. today at Sunset Memorial Park in Twin Falls, with the Rev. Dale Metzger officiating. Arrangements are under the direction of White Mortuary in Twin Falls.

BUHL – Elsie Lorraine Smith, 74, of Buhl, died Monday, May 24, 1993, at Harrat's Nursing Home in Buhl.

She was born Jan. 22, 1919, in Topeka, Kan., to Luther and Russie Rictor. She married Claude Edward Smith on Nov. 19, 1933, in Fayetteville, Ark. They moved to Buhl in 1934. She will be greatly missed by her family and friends.

She is survived by her husband, Claude of Buhl; a son, Carl LeRoy Smith of Twin Falls; two daughters, Loretta Tackett of Newbury Park, Calif., and Linda Smith of La Grande, Ore.; a sister, Thelma Williams of Buhl; seven grandchildren; and 14 great-grandchildren.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday at the Farmer Funeral Chapel in Buhl. Burial will follow at the West End Cemetery in Buhl. Friends may call from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. today at the funeral chapel.

Lamar Craner

BURLEY – Lamar Craner, 85, of Burley, died Saturday, May 22, 1993, at the Cassia Memorial Hospital in Burley.

He was born Sept. 7, 1907, in Oakley, the son of M. Ray and Ella Briggs Craner. He grew up in Burley and received his education in the Burley school system. After high school, he attended and graduated from Links Business College in Boise.

After working with a couple of shipping firms, he became interested enough in the business to start up partnership with Paul Mueller in the early 1930s. In 1940, he moved to Hereford, Texas, where he formed a partnership with Howard Gault and pioneered the panhandle of Texas in growing and shipping potatoes. He returned to Idaho in 1944, and served two years in the U.S. Navy during World War II. He established the Craner Produce Company in Burley, and was involved in growing and shipping Idaho potatoes until his retirement in 1972.

He was active in the Idaho Growers Association serving as president in 1962-63. He was active in community affairs and served eight years on the Burley City Council. He was a past president of the Burley Rotary Club, a past exalted ruler, and was a lifetime member of the Burley Elks Lodge No. 1384. He was a Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the El Korah Shriners, and was a member of the Burley First Presbyterian Church.

Lamar married Pearl Heise on Jan. 26, 1929, in Pocatello. In 1979, they moved to Lake Havasu City, Ariz., where they celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. His wife preceded him in death on Feb. 20, 1988. Lamar returned to Idaho two years ago to be near his family.

Survivors include a daughter, Mrs. Max (Marilyn) Larson; and a sister, Mrs. Hal (Wanda) Jolley, all of Burley; two granddaughters, Mrs. Jamie (Susan) Martin of Hagerman and Mrs. Roger (Patricia) Wright of Eagle; and seven great-grandchildren. In addition to his wife, he was preceded in death by his parents, a brother, Vernal Craner; and a sister, Rita Carmody.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, May 28, 1993, at the Burley First Presbyterian Church, 2100 Burton Ave., with the Rev. Dr. David A. Henry officiating.

The family suggests memorial contributions may be given to the Burley First Presbyterian Church Memorial Fund. Arrangements are under the direction of the Payne Mortuary in Burley.

for children – according to the study.

The study was somewhat flawed, partly because the data base Brown used only presented primary, and not secondary, causes of illnesses, Brown said.

But the study does demonstrate the relationship between a shortage of doctors and rising health care costs, Brown said.

"There is no doubt that a lot of those patients would not be in the emergency room if they had their own doctor," she said.

Brown's study supports a national study by the American Hospital Association, which recently found that 43 percent of hospital emergency visits were made for nonurgent primary care.

"The use of emergency departments for primary care has become so routine that some patients, particularly indigent patients, name their emergency physician when asked about their primary care giver," said Mark Sonneborn, vice president of the Dallas/Fort Worth Hospital Council, in a news release.

Providing primary care in emergency rooms means more congested emergency departments, less continuity of care and higher health-care costs, said Irene Fraser, director of AHA's division of ambulatory care.

At least in the Magic Valley, health care workers are looking at a way to reduce unnecessary emergency rooms visits for Medicaid patients.

Several doctors and health workers have formed the "Coordinated Community Care Project," to give Medicaid patients better access to medical care.

Under the program, which will begin in late August, Medicaid patients will choose a doctor to manage their health care for a small monthly fee. The doctor will also receive regular Medicaid reimbursements whenever he cares for the patient.

Before receiving medical care, whether from their assigned doctor or not, the Medicaid patient would first have to discuss his illness with the assigned doctor, Brown said.

Landfill

Fraley and Commissioners Norma Blass and Marvin Hempleman.

But should voters not pass the bond issue, the commissioners might consider asking a judge to let the county issue bonds without voter approval, such as the district is doing. That's why the commissioners attended the hearing in Rupert.

"The outcome of this (the district's court hearing) could have a determination on which way we go," Fraley said.

But the commissioners say the bond issue stands a good chance of passing. "People know the predicament we're in," Fraley said.

To help sell voters on the proposition, they will take their case to the public this week.

The three will operate an information booth at the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce "Business After Hours" from 5:30 to 7 p.m. Thursday in the parking lot next to Cooper Norman & Co., 155 2nd Ave. North.

The commissioners want to build a new landfill on Hub Butte because the county's old one does not comply with new federal rules meant to protect groundwater.

They say that issuing bonds to pay for the landfill will not increase taxes. Landfill users will pay for the facility through increased gate fees at an average $2.80 a month for the typical county household, the commissioners say.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency had set an Oct. 9 deadline to comply with the new landfill rules. But the agency announced recently that it will propose extending the deadline by six months.

If Twin Falls County voters do not pass the bond issue and the county is forced to keep its old landfill open, the cost could total up to $2.5 million, according to county estimates.

The costs would arise from federal requirements to monitor groundwater around the old landfill.

Thursday's "Business After Hours" will be sponsored by Cooper Norman & Co. and PSI Waste Systems.

Besides the commissioners, members of the county landfill siting and fee committees will be at the information booth. Representatives from the engineering firms designing the landfill also will be available to answer questions.

Cassia officials question reports of lax punishment for juveniles

By Eric Goodell
Mini-Cassia News Service

BURLEY – The chairman of the Cassia County commission says he wants to look into reports that juveniles aren't being adequately punished when they commit crimes in the county.

John Adams said during a commission meeting Monday that several people have told him Cassia County "is missing the boat" on punishing juveniles.

"We have reports of people getting back to school and saying it was a great time," Adams said.

He said the commissioners want to organize a committee to study juvenile punishment.

But Public Defender Douglas Whipple assured Adams that the court system and the Mini-Cassia Juvenile Detention Center aren't all fun and games.

He said some kids "talk tough" and pretend to be unfazed after coming back from detention. But there are often "whimpers and sobs" from the defendants in the courtroom, he said.

"I think some really wonder what's going to happen to them," he said.

He said Minidoka County has been sending more youngsters to the juvenile detention center than Cassia County.

Judges have different sentencing philosophies, Whipple said. Some give stiff sentences, while others prefer lighter sentences accompanied by warnings of much tougher treatment next time, Whipple said.

Under law, judges must treat juveniles with rehabilitation in mind, Whipple said. Parental involvement can play a big part in rehabilitating juveniles who commit crimes, he added.

Detention center director Paul Frick, in a later interview, said 40 percent of the Mini-Cassia youth who spend time in the facility are from Cassia County. The 12-bed facility, located in Rupert, has been open for six months.

Frick agreed with Whipple that kids, though they may act unaffected by their punishment, don't like the center.

"They don't like being locked up and losing their freedoms," he said. "I see a lot of kids who put on a mask."

Once they have served time in the facility, they don't want to go back, Frick said.

Man enters house

Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – A Rupert woman was awaken early Friday morning by an intruder standing next to her bed.

According to Rupert police, Beatrice Andrade, 19, awoke in her Fourth Street house at 2:57 a.m. and discovered a man she recognized. He asked where the party was, she told police.

When Andrade told the man there was no party, he asked her how to get out of the house, police said.

Andrade told officers she got up and let the suspect out the front door. Police said the suspect entered the house through a bathroom window.

Police were unable to locate the suspect.

Suspect wreaks havoc on car with feet

BURLEY – A handcuffed suspect with nimble feet locked himself inside a patrol car and put the car into motion Sunday, the Cassia County Sheriff's Department says.

Deputies arrested the 17-year-old boy at about 11 p.m. in the 800 block of Eighth Street, on charges that he had tried to choke his mother with a pipe. He resisted being handcuffed, kicking one deputy in the hand and striking another deputy with his shoulder, deputies said.

Once loaded into a patrol car, he freed his feet from hobbles and kicked the car's radar unit and windshield.

The deputy who was driving pulled over and got out of the car, leaving the engine running and the transmission in "park."

The boy then apparently kicked the car's shift lever out of park and kicked the automatic door locks.

The deputy stopped the moving car after using a spare key to unlock it the door. A van was brought to take the boy to the juvenile detention center in Rupert.

The boy's mother and one deputy were treated at Cassia Memorial Hospital.

The boy faces charges of aggravated battery, battery on a sheriff's deputy, destruction of jail property and resisting arrest.

CD player reported taken from vehicle

BURLEY – A vehicle was reported burglarized Saturday while parked in a fenced compound near Volco in Burley, deputies say.

According to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department, the Blazer belonging to Jason Lynch had a window broken out.

A compact disc player, amplifier, and several speakers were taken from the vehicle. Loss was placed at $1,060.

Stereo missing from pickup in Rupert

RUPERT – A woman reported Sunday that someone had stolen the stereo from her husband's pickup.

According to the Rupert Police Department, Angelita Rodriguez, 37, said the stereo was taken sometime after Friday. The disassembled pickup was parked behind her "A" Street house.

The loss was estimated at $120.

Parked car suffers from hit-and-run

RUPERT – A Rupert man reported Monday that someone had struck his car, which was parked in front of his house.

According to the Rupert Police Department Moises Ramos said he parked his 1989 Plymouth outside his house on Seventh Street Sunday evening and discovered it had been struck by a hit-and-run driver the next morning.

Damage was estimated at $600.

DAV, Auxiliary offer weekend coffee

BURLEY – Mini-Cassia Chapter No. 10 of the Disabled American Veterans and Auxiliary will operate a coffee break stand at the westbound Cotterell rest area on Interstate 84 over the Memorial Day weekend, Saturday through Monday.

Coffee, cookies and punch will be given to motorists and travelers. Although the refreshments are free, donations are accepted.

Any money received will go toward helping needy veterans and their families in the Mini-Cassia area, to provide veterans transportation to hospitals in Boise and Salt Lake City, and to aid veterans in nursing homes.

The DAV has conducted the coffee breaks over major holidays the past few years.

Wife raises stink over stress of houseguests

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: I have written to you several times to tell you how I feel about houseguests, but none of my letters were printed; however, now that you have asked your readers how they deal with the houseguest problem, I'm writing again.

I cannot stand having houseguests – or being a houseguest! My husband and his relatives are aware of this, but they continue to ignore the fact. This has caused many a rift in our marriage.

I am not a terrible person; I just know my limitations. People underfoot, messing up my house and robbing me of my privacy, is very stressful to me. I have gotten physically sick knowing I had to deal with houseguests.

My husband is welcome to visit his relatives as much as he wants, but I have told him repeatedly, "Leave me out of it!" I have never liked my in-laws or most of my husband's relatives because they never liked me, and they have made no secret of the fact.

I say, the quickest way to lose a friend or make an enemy is to have to live with him. Remember that old saying, "Friends and relatives in your house are like fish: After three days, they stink!"

– FED UP IN OHIO

DEAR FED UP: Another reader shares your opinion about houseguests, but he clearly states his rules and regulations. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I live in San Francisco and own a large Victorian house on Guerrero Street, which many relatives and out-of-town friends find irresistible to visit.

After many arguments over who shall be our houseguests and how long they can stay, we finally made some rules. These are our criteria:

(1) We insist on advance notice of at least two weeks. No ringing the doorbell with suitcases in hand, saying, "Hello! We wanted to surprise you."

(2) We have a limit of three days, and only once a year, please.

(3) Two people maximum each stay.

(4) Guests must be independent: willing to rent a car, or take a sightseeing bus if they want a tour of the city.

(5) Guests must eat what we eat. If they have special needs, they should bring or buy their own food.

(6) They must be comfortable with two cockatiel-birds in the house and three rabbits in our garden.

(7) We have no maid service here. Guests must make their own beds and clean up their own messes.

Abby, these rules have worked fine for us. We have lost no friends, and we got rid of a lot of freeloaders and inconsiderate slobs. You may use my name if you want to.

– FRANZ J. SOEHNGEN

DEAR FRANZ J. SOEHNGEN: There's nothing like being up-front and stating one's houseguest rules in advance. Bravo!

DEAR ABBY: In regards to mispronounced names: Our family name is "Venema," and for some reason, very few people get it right; so first, I spell it – then I say, "Venema – it rhymes with enema." It usually gets a chuckle, but they always remember it.

Board to hire outside help to fight schools superintendent's lawsuit

BOISE (AP) — The state Board of Education will secure outside counsel to fight Schools Superintendent Jerry Evans' lawsuit against dividing the board into two.

Evans recently filed suit in 4th District Court to stay the appointment of an additional board member in preparation for creating a council for public schools and another for higher education.

Evans, himself a board member, maintains the new statute passed by the Legislature this past winter and signed by Gov. Cecil Andrus violates the Idaho Constitution which mandates one state board.

The 5-2 vote in a Monday telephone conference succeeded despite Boise board member Joe Parkinson's admonition the bill approved this year to create two boards may not survive in court. The outside lawyer would also represent Andrus.

"I see a conflict between the board and the governor because the state board was never consulted on the legislation. It looks like a conflict to me."

Parkinson added the attorney general's office released an opinion undercutting the legality of two boards. Parkinson and Roberta Fields of New Meadows voted against seeking outside counsel.

"This statute deserves to be forcefully defended in a court room somewhere to define its constitutionality," said board member Roy Mosman, a Moscow attorney.

"Each of us has an idea about its constitutionality and each of us is deciding for ourselves."

Jon Carter, state attorney representing Andrus, told the regents that the attorney general's office could do an adequate job defending them.

"I have some concerns about using the attorney general's office by virtue of the fact they already issued a strongly worded opinion, which suggests their predisposition to the outcome of the case," he said.

Harvard battles water system

HARVARD (AP) — Getting a drink from the kitchen faucet and flushing the toilet are activities taken for granted in most American homes.

But not in Harvard, where patrons of the Hoo Doo Water and Sewer District continue to struggle with what they call a "Cadillac" system that's all but sputtered to a halt.

"We've got a health problem out here in Harvard," said James Waterman, district board chairman.

The volunteer board is the only governmental body in this unincorporated Latah County community of 35 households. The houses, plus a tavern and a post office, are served by decade-old water and sewer systems that cost about $750,000 to install.

Now both need expensive repairs. The entire town, for example, was without water during a stretch last February. Right now, the city well is providing only about 3 gallons per minute. That's barely enough to supply one house. And even if the volume were good, the state of Idaho has condemned the well because of iron bacteria.

"This system is like a screen in a sink," said Hoo Doo water and sewer maintenance man Norman Bateson. "When the stuff settles out, it just sets there like an orange slime."

The slime plugs the works, and nothing seems to help, Bateson said.

If the town's water problems aren't enough, three of four pumps that drive the sewer system failed this spring. Bateson said people at the sewer system's lower end don't dare flush during spring runoff because more comes back into their houses than goes out.

On top of it all, the Hoo Doo treasury is "flat broke," said board member Lynne Anderson.

Engineers estimate it will cost between $1,500 and $3,000 to temporarily fix to the city well's iron problem with chemicals. The long-range remedy might cost $250,000 or more. Repairs on the sewer pumps continue to mount while monthly fees collected from ratepayers — $27 per household — don't come close to covering costs.

Meanwhile, residents are rationing what water they can get, cutting back on flushes, doing laundry elsewhere and, yes, perhaps drinking more pop and beer.

Money is available, but not nearly as available as 10 years ago when Harvard's water and sewer systems were installed, said Eric Phillips of the Clearwater Economic Development Association at Lewiston.

Congressmen split vote on $1.5 billion subsidy

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Here are the votes of Idaho senators and representatives on major legislation in Congress this past week.

The House on Wednesday approved by a 243-167 margin a bill (H.R.820) that would authorize $1.5 billion to subsidize the development of manufacturing technology.

A "yes" vote is in favor of passing the bill.

Mike Crapo, Republican, voted no; Larry LaRocco, Democrat, voted yes.

There were no votes in the Senate this past week.

The attendance record tracks the cumulative attendance of members to date when they are physically present for roll call votes.

Senate attendance, present and voting: Larry Craig, Republican, 99.17 percent; Dirk Kempthorne, Republican, 100 percent.

Freud an egotistical dreamer

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

Do you ever recall having a dream in which you weren't a key character? Doubtlessly not, if Sigmund Freud got it right. He said, When you dream, you always dream about yourself. "Dreams are absolutely egotistic."

Early typists couldn't see what they typed.

Q. I say it was the 1979 movie "10" that really made famous that musical number "Bolero," right?

A. Last time around, Maurice Ravel wrote it for his "Bolero" ballet in 1928. By the time Ravel died in 1937, just about everybody knew "Bolero."

Those with a curious faith in curative powers of colors claim turquoise is the best healer.

Q. My mother used to say I cooked enough to feed Cox's army? Who was he?

A. Make that Coxey's Army. In hard times a century ago, Jacob Sechler Coxey called for a big road-improvement program to create jobs. He organized an "army" of unemployed men to march from Massilon, Ohio, to Washington, D.C., starting with 100, expecting to pick up 100,000 on the way. He got there with about 500. Police arrested him for walking on the Capitol lawn. Everybody went home.

Wrote the poet Eugene Field: "All human joys are swift of wing, / For heaven doth so allot it, / That which you get an easy thing, / You find you haven't got it."

Client writes: "I just saw a breakfast cereal commercial wherein the actors did not talk with their mouths full? What's the world coming to?"

Q. How come chicken pox is called that?

A. The old English word "gican" meant "itch." The ailment started out as itching pox. "Gican" evolved into "chicken."

Horoscope

IF MAY 25 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are spiritual, sensitive, psychic, have tendency to brood over little things and to take direct action when major projects are concerned. Pisces, Virgo persons play fascinating roles in your life. Puzzle pieces come together in June, you'll read them accurately, you'll revise material, you'll replace outworn machinery. July features variety of experiences, including flirtation, romance, written material.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Although ring was recently pulled out from under you, during this Tuesday you make remarkable comeback. Focus on responsibility, deadline.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Finish what you start, emphasize universality, keep faith there is a "soul mate" for you. Cancer moon highlights trips, visits involving relatives.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You'll be amused and amazed — you encounter new experiences that "light up your life." You could win contest, you might hit financial jackpot.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This is your kind of day, the action will be where you are, reunion with family member takes place tonight, gourmet dining blends with romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some counsel, "Please keep quiet, don't wake sleeping dogs!" Politely inform, "I intend to live my life my way!" Focus on celebration, vindication, popularity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Scenario highlights fixing mechanical objects, mending, testing tools, recipes. Wishes come true, you win friends and influence people possibly during "sumptuous" dinner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasis on written word, communication; flirtation or "blind date" that lends spice, could develop into "something important." Cancer moon coincides with promotion, production, leadership.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Dilemma exists: You want to travel but main responsibilities are at home. Solution comes via diplomacy, intelligent concession, domestic adjustment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You'll gain enlightenment regarding, "Why am I here?" Focus on hidden values, secret accounts, revelation concerning financial status of partner, mate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You'll be dealing with another Capricorn likely to have these letters, initials in name: B, O, Z. Spotlight on legal agreements, partnership, cooperative efforts, public image, marital status.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You'll gain wider audience, you'll exude "universal appeal." Recent concerns regarding health, employment proved groundless. You'll have reason to feel better, to celebrate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New outlook in connection with home, property, family relationships. What you own is worth more than might be anticipated. Scenario features fresh concepts, daring individuals who become your allies.

Briefly in business

Industry decides to join on new age television

WASHINGTON — Wrangling among industry groups over the best technology for high-definition television ended Monday with an agreement by competing companies to work together.

Now, they'll build a system using the best of each technology to be tested as soon as possible and presented sometime next year to the Federal Communications Commission, said Richard Wiley, chairman of the FCC's advisory committee on advanced television.

Four systems have been developed by three industry groups: General Instrument-Massachussetts Institute of Technology, Zenith-AT&T, and NBC-Thomson-Philips-David Sarnoff Research Center-Compression Labs Inc.

Wiley said their merger will lead to a new digital broadcast standard that will "emulate the motion picture experience" and lead the world in television technology. The super-sharp pictures and concert hall quality sound also are expected to find business and scientific uses. Intricate medical procedures, for example, could be demonstrated over HDTV with details not possible on today's TV.

Clinton announces expansion of small business loan program

WASHINGTON — President Clinton announced today the expansion of an experimental loan program that sets up community-based lending agencies to help small businesses expand.

The program would give the smallest companies access to credit and could create as many as 42,000 new jobs, he said. "This is an innovative approach which opens the doors of opportunity to Americans who otherwise would find those doors closed," Clinton said in a Rose Garden ceremony.

A pragmatist bends Clinton's ear

As top economic adviser, pioneering feminist offers tough proscription for nation's ills

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Laura D'Andrea Tyson is the kind of person who thinks it's funny that her husband referred to her in print as a babe, and doesn't mind that her office door sign says chairman instead of chairwoman.

She is the first woman to head the president's Council of Economic Advisers, and the first CEA chief of any gender to be married to a Hollywood comedy writer.

"I like to laugh," Tyson explains with disarming simplicity.

She explains everything that way — including a controversial, quasi-protectionist trade philosophy that she expounds in the fiercely entitled book "Who's Bashing Whom?"

Tyson, 45, is decidedly non-fierce, with her elegant silk suits, seed-pearl jewelry, open manner and cheerful disposition. But her bitten nails and tenacity in the face of opposition are hints of the drive that has gotten her where she is: in a key place on President Clinton's economic team.

The former Berkeley professor and her new boss share much in common, including their generation and a penchant for reading mysteries. Like Clinton, Tyson is a pragmatist who'd rather deal in case studies than abstract theories. Her instinct, like his, is to bridge differences and inch forward.

The MIT-trained economist prefers honey to vinegar, but makes sure her voice is heard.

"A gentle comment from Laura has to be translated," said John Zysman, a Berkeley economist who has been close to her for years. "She once referred to someone as disingenuous. That meant in my language that he's a ... liar. She confirmed later that's what she meant, but she wouldn't ever say it."

"There's a certain presence. It's quiet," said Sherman Robinson, a Berkeley colleague who has known Tyson for 20 years and written numerous articles with her about Yugoslavia and Hungary.

He said Tyson is not "an orator-lecturer," but won a prestigious teaching prize at Berkeley. "She's incredibly well organized and she just comes across as knowing what she's talking about," said Robinson, who is working for the council this summer.

Tyson is best known for advocating managed trade, a middle ground between protectionism and free trade that involves steering federal money toward certain high-tech sectors and aggressively pressuring trade partners to buy their products. Her views have been reflected in Clinton's tough stances toward Japan and Airbus, the European aerospace consortium.

Her formal job is to advise Clinton on the impact of his economic policies — including his budget and the huge health reform package due next month.

"She's never, ever afraid to speak her mind" at meetings, said White House health spokesman Bob Boorstin. "She's really breaking new ground," he added, by helping make policies rather than merely analyzing their effects.

Tyson said it was lonely 10 years ago when she first started delving into questions of trade equity and industrial policy, but mainstream economists are now asking the same questions.

"It makes me feel like I wasn't wrong to ask them," she said. "There's been some movement in the profession. I'm not saying I caused it."

Tyson describes herself as a "non-controversial figure," but her professional views tend to inspire either great respect or severe skepticism.

During a World Bank mission to Yugoslavia some years ago, Robinson recalled, an eminent Yugoslav did a double take when he saw the young woman and broke away from his other duties to exclaim, "Professor Tyson! What are you doing here? You don't need to learn about Yugoslavia."

When she testified a decade ago at a House Small Business Committee hearing in California, "Dr. Tyson so impressed me that I tried to hire her immediately thereafter, but to no avail," said longtime committee chairman John LaFalce, D-N.Y.

At the other extreme, free traders consider Tyson's ideas dangerous and macroeconomists disdain her focus on case studies. Her appointment prompted a flurry of nasty comments, some from people she had considered friends.

MIT professor Paul Krugman, who wanted the job himself, described Tyson as "not one of the superstars." New York Times economics columnist Peter Passell said Clinton had bypassed "the wisest economic heads of his generation." Harvard economist Robert Barro wrote that Tyson "has scant academic credentials."

Tyson and others attribute the backlash to a mix of policy concerns, professional jealousy, surprise and some old-fashioned sexism.

"I tried to distance myself" from what people were saying, she said. "Sometimes I was amused. Sometimes I was annoyed. Sometimes I couldn't believe it... There are not many women in my profession and not many who've made it. I suppose that is a subtle issue for some people."

Tyson knows she is a pioneer, but she doesn't carry the mantle with leaden seriousness. In fact, she's the one who encouraged her husband, Erik Tarloff, to submit wry essays to The New York Times and Washington Post.

In the Post piece, he describes what it was like to watch Senate Banking Committee members grill someone who looked a lot like his wife. "Sure, this woman is a babe, but I'm lucky I'm married to Laura instead. If I ever got into a marital spat with this one, I'd be dog meat," were the thoughts he said ran through his head.

"A women's group called and left a message that he should really be more supportive of me," Tyson recalled with a laugh. "Some people said these are angry pieces. I said they're angry! They're funny."

In Berkeley, the economist-scriptwriter couple was an oddity but not as odd as here.

Tyson expects Tarloff, when he arrives next month, to be her insurance against having to talk shop at parties. She may also start eating better. "She doesn't cook. If anyone cooks at home, it's me," Tarloff said.

The couple's 10-year-old son, Elliott, is already here and enrolled at Sidwell Friends — the same private school attended by Chelsea Clinton and several other children of administration officials.

by/Linda Gilmore, Deputy PUBLISH: Tuesday, May 25, 1993.

In compliance with Idaho Code Section 67-5203(a)(1), notice is herby given that the Idaho Department of Water Resources has initiated rulemaking. The proposed action involves adoption of Rules of Procedure governing contested case proceedings before the Idaho Department of Water Resources and the Idaho Water Resource Board, effective July 1, 1993 (IDAPA 37.01.01). The proposed rules substantially adopt the Idaho Rules of Administrative Procedure of the Attorney General, IDAPA 04.11.01, adopted March 24, 1993, with a few changes. The action is authorized by Sections 42-1701A(1), 42-1734A(19), 42-1805(8) and 67-5206(5), Idaho Code.

The Idaho Rules of Administrative Procedure of the Attorney General establish comprehensive procedures for contested cases and rule-making under the Idaho Administrative Procedures Act, title 67, chapter 52, Idaho Code. The proposed action by the Department of Water Resources, in accordance with Section 67-5206(5), Idaho Code, provides for separate procedural rules only with respect to contested cases before the Department and the Water Board.

The proposed rules use verbatim most of the contested case rules of the Attorney General, with the following exceptions:

1. Factual, definitional and technical changes specific to the Department and the Board.

2. Minor modifications in certain rules for the purpose of clarification or to correspond with a preferred or more suitable practice of the agency.

3. Minor modifications in rules governing the listing of representatives (Rules 200--202), the filing and service of documents (Rules 300-301), intervention in ongoing proceedings (Rule 350), ex parte communications (Rule 417), alternate dispute resolution (Rule 500), prehearing conferences (Rule 510), subpoenas (Rule 525), use of exhibits (Rule 606), recording of hearings (Rule 651), default orders (Rule 702), and modification in the definition of final orders to encompass emergency orders, including cease and desist and show cause orders (Rule 740).

The Department has scheduled a public hearing on the proposed rulemaking on May 28, 1993, 10:00 a.m., at the Department of Water Resources, 2nd Floor Conf. Rm. 1301 N. Orchard St.

Interested pesons may present their views, comments and arguments in writing to the Director on or before the date of hearing or may present them orally or in writing to the Director a the pubic hearing.

Copies of the proposed rules may be obatined upon written request to the Director, Idaho Department of Water Resources, Statehouse Mail, Boise, Idaho 83720 or in person at 1301 N. Orchard Street, Boise, Idaho, or at the regional offices of the Department located in Idaho Falls, Twin Falls and Coeur d'Alene.

Dated this 4th day of April, 1993.

R. KEITH HIGGINSON
Director

THE ACES ON BRIDGE — BOBBY WOLFF

"None but the brave deserves the fair."
— John Dryden.

"He had a cinch endplay to make his slam," explained an unhappy team player. "You could have done the same at your table. How did the play go against you?"

That was a question he should not have asked.

Neither team bid the superior diamond slam, which was unbeatable; the heart slam was something else.

At the first table, South won his club ace, drew trumps and cashed three rounds of diamonds, saving the ace in dummy. Two more trumps were cashed and West began some heavy breathing as he blanked down to the K-8 of spades and the Q-10 of clubs. When South led his last diamond to dummy's ace, West agonized and threw the club 10, and South read the situation easily. West was forced to win his club queen, and South's A-Q of spades took the last two tricks.

In the replay, West saw what was in store for him, so he discarded deceptively. On the third round of diamonds, West discarded a low club, and on the fourth and fifth trumps, he bravely discarded the trey and eight of spades. When the fourth diamond was led to dummy, West discarded his 10 of clubs, and South thought he had the same endplay. He put West on lead in clubs, but instead of a spade exit, West produced the club nine and West's deceptive discarding hit a big jackpot.

Remember, if you must blank a king, don't do it in pain. The more nonchalance you display, the more chance that declarer will go wrong.
